George Carrington Mason described St. George's Church in its original form as "one of the quaintest and most interesting colonial church buildings in Virginia." Its original appearance is known through an 1819 drawing by Reverend James Wallis Eastburn. The drawing, which appeared as a frontispiece for a volume of Eastburn's poems, was described by Mason as follows:

Pongoteague Church was built in the form of a Latin cross and had a semicircular apse, with a conical top, at the east end. Perhaps the most distinctive feature of its design was a hipped gambrel roof, ending in a gable in way of the apse. The two wings forming the transept were of equal length and the chancel and nave slightly longer, and this shape, in connection with that of the rounded apse, brought the building the irreverent nickname of "The Ace of Clubs Church."

Because of heavy damage suffered during the Civil War, the only remaining original portions of St. George's Church are the north and south walls, and the end bays of the east and west walls. During the renovation following the war, the nave and chancel were torn down, and the left-over bricks were used to close up the openings between the wings or transepts; the existing north and south walls are the ends of the transepts. Although the south wall has been disfigured by the closing up of the semicircular arched opening over the door, the original brickwork of the south wall ranks among the most beautiful examples of colonial Flemish bond in the country. The clear blues of the glazed headers contrast strongly with the rich reds of the stretchers and the rubbed corner bricks. The much patched and repaired sections of original brickwork in other parts of the church are also laid in Flemish bond but with random glazing. The brick below the bevelled water table is laid in unglazed Flemish bond.

The church is now covered by a pedimented gable roof with a simple belfry. The pediment, cornice, windows, and all other wood trim date from the post-Civil War renovation and are in a simple Greek Revival style. The dimensions of the present form of the building are 57'-3" north-to-south, and 25'-3" east-to-west. A modern, one-story colonial-style parish hall stands to the east of the church. The burying ground to the southeast of the church contains stones bearing the names of many prominent Eastern Shore families, but none of the stones appear to be colonial.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

St. George's Church was known as Pungoteague Church until 1800 when the name was changed to conform with St. George's Parish, created out of the lower portion of Accomack Parish in 1762. The date of erection of the present, though now much altered, church has been the subject of controversy it is thought to have been built in 1738, replacing perhaps two earlier structures on, or near, the site. An Accomack County Court entry for October 3, 1738, states that "An Assignment of all Tobacco &c to be levied for Building of Pungoteague Church From John Snead Gentleman to William Andrews was proved in the Court by the oath of Peter Bodwin a Witness theret and Admitted to Record."

As originally built, St. George's Church was a most unusual and picturesque Latin cross-shaped structure. It continued in regular service through the eighteenth century, but was abandoned during the War of 1812. Restored to use seven years later, it served its parishioners until the Civil War, when Federal troops desecrated the church. They used the main part of the building for a stable, and raided one of the wings for bricks to build a cook house. Following the war, St. George's stood as a roofless ruin until 1880, when parts of the transepts were renovated to serve as the main body of the church. In 1905, some of the older parishioners made depositions before the United States Court of Claims in a suit to secure damages for the desecration.

Although only a small portion of the original building survives, the largely intact south wall stands as one of the most beautiful and perfect panels of colonial Flemish bond with glazed headers in the country. St. George's is one of only two colonial churches remaining on Virginia's Eastern Shore. As a relic on a site held sacred since the mid-seventeenth century, the church is a significant religious landmark.
