Located on the historic and largely unspoiled Ware Neck, Lowland Cottage is pictuesquely placed in a park-like setting near the bank of the Ware River. Its broad flat yard is dotted with large shade trees, and from it a wide prospect of the river and both near and distant shores is obtained. The house is approached from the north by a tree-lined avenue across open fields.

Like nearly all seventeenth century frame houses, Lowland Cottage has had a complex structural history. The main and earliest part of the house. considered to have been built between 1666 and 1676, is a gambrel roofed one-and-a-half-story structure, approximately forty feet by twenty feet. Originally its plan was very similar to that of the typical New England farm house of the same period, having two principal rooms served by a massive central chimney. Also like the New England house, Lowland Cottage originally had a small winding stair backed up to the chimney on its north side, and a very narrow vestibule in the corresponding position on the south side. The location of this chimney is confirmed by a small drawing of the house made in 1831 for the Gloucester County Surveyor's Book, and by the presence of the chimney's foundations under the floor. This central chimney was dismantled between 1831 and 1840, and the resulting space was used for a straight single-run stair. A much smaller, slightly off-center chimney was built to heat the east room, and an exterior end chimney was built to heat the west room. Covering the house in its original form was a gambrel roof--a very early example of this roof form.

Sometime between 1783 and 1831 Lowland Cottage received two additions: a one-and-a-half-story gambrel-roofed wing on the east end, and a two-story wing on the north side. These additions are thought to have been made by Richard and Martha Jones to accommodate their numerous children.

In 1854 the appearance of the house was changed considerably as a result of a remodeling by William Godfrey. In order to make the house appear to be two full stories Godfrey erected a false wall above the first floor, thus hiding the lower slope of the gambrel roof. He also raised the east wing to two full stories, and extended the north wing to provide room for an indoor kitchen and a room above it. Godfrey further replaced all the windows and doors in the original portion, and put a one-story porch across the south front.

In 1935 the house was again remodeled, but this time as an attempt to partially return it to its original aspect. The framing of the gambrel roof was found to be intact, and the roof was restored to its original shape. Also, the original seventeenth century beaded ceiling beams of the first floor east and west rooms were found to be in good condition above a later ceiling and were once again exposed. Several new windows were cut in the walls, principally in the east and west ends. The present owner has made minor changes and necessary structural repairs since 1963, but has not significantly altered the house's appearance. The present owner also rebuilt the much decayed early cabin located to the northwest of the house.

Throckmorton. Lowland Cottage was again inherited by Martha Throckmorton Jones when her husband died in 1826. Following her death in 1840, the property passed through a number of owners among whom was William Godfrey, who considerably altered the house in 1854. The present owner inherited the property through his mother, Harriotte Lee Taliaferro Montague. Mrs. Montague was the granddaughter of Warner Throckmorton Taliaferro of Belle Ville, who aquired Lowland Cottage in 1856 from William Godfrey.

Lowland Cottage survives as one of the handful of Virginia frame structures that with certainty can be dated to the seventeenth century. Although the skin of the house has been renewed several times, and the original interior trim lost, the original frame survives including a fine set of beaded ceiling beams in the two principal rooms. Even though the central chimney has been removed, no other seventeenth century frame house of the central chimney type is known to remain in Virginia. Excavations, however, have shown this to have been a very common architectural type in the earliest years of settlement. As the location of considerable seventeenth century
