This rambling clapboarded farm dwelling sits placidly in the rolling hills of Goodhland County overlook; a the broad flat bottom lands of the upper James River. Surrounded by open fields and woodlands, Bolling Hall's setting has changed little since the days of its builder.

The appearance of the house, however, has evolved over the years to its present state. As originally constructed for William Bolling, the house was a two-story structure with a side hall plan. Its outside dimensions were 34 by 22 feet. By 1803 it had acquired an 18 by 18 foot one-story wing on the east end. An 1815 insurance policy of the Mutual Assurance Society of Richmond shows that by then the house had received a two-story addition on its west side, causing the main part of the house to appear almost symmetrical. The house was extensively remodeled sometime between 1845 and 1861 by Mary Bolling and her husband Richard Skipwith. During the remodeling the stair was removed from the hall and placed in a new projecting tower near the center of the house's north side. A one-story wing was put on the end, and the east wing was raised to two full stories. In A conservatory was also added to the end of the east wing. The pitch of the roof was lowered and the cornice was changed.

In 1947 Bolling Hall was purchased by Mr. and Mrs. Dwight A. Files who found the house in poor repair and being used as a barn. The Files carefully renovated the house and replaced the tower with a two-story porch with enclosed upper level. They also built a new stair in the original hall, removed the conservatory, and put a one-story wing in its place. Despite the many changes that have taken place in the house, it retains much of its early sash, early beaded clapboards, and sections of the original Flemish bond foundation.

The interior trim of Bolling Hall is quite fine but difficult to date. The main room in the oldest section of the house is handsomely outfitted with a paneled end wall, consisting of a chimney piece with molded shelf and architrave surround. The chimney piece is flanked by fluted pilasters and raised paneled doors. At the top of the wall is a wall-of-Troy cornice which surrounds the entire room. The room above the main room also has a paneled end wall, but it is treated in a more simple fashion. Because the end walls in the circa 1815 addition are virtually identical in style to those in the earlier section it is open to speculation if all the paneling dates from the same period, or if that in the addition was copied from the trim in the earlier section. In either case, all of the paneling is in the style of the eighteenth century rather than the nineteenth.

As late as 1879 Bolling Hall had retained its early brick kitchen, brick smokehouse, and a number of slave cabins. All of these carly outbuildings have disappeared, however. On a hill immediately to the southwest of the house is the old walled Bolling graveyard.

The Bolling Hall lands were first acquired in 1714 by John Bolling, Sr., son of the immigrant Robert Bolling, and a grandson of Jane Rolfe, daughter of Pocohontas. John Bolling Sr.'s grandson William inherited the land in 1757, and it was he who built the earliest portion of the present house around the third quarter of the eighteenth century. William Bolling married his first cousin, Mary Randolph, daughter of Richard Randolph of Curles. Two of the children of this union: William Albert (born 1797) and Mary (born 1809), were born deaf. Congenital deafness has appeared in the Bolling family before, more particularly in the children of William Bolling's uncle Thomas Bolling of Cobbs in Chesterfield County who had his children educated in Edinburgh under the direction of Thomas Briarwood, a noted pioneer educator of the deaf. Since William Bolling was unwilling to send his children abroad, he was pleased to learn in 1812 that John Briarwood, grandson of the famous teacher, announced his intentions of establishing a school for the deaf in Philadelphia. The school failed to develop so Bolling brought Briarwood to Bolling Hall where Briarwood taught not only Bolling's deaf children but his hearing children as well. Briarwood proved to be such a gifted teacher that parents of other deaf children requested that their children be allowed to come to Bolling Hall and learn under him. Bolling was unwilling to turn Bolling Hall into an institution but consented to convert the old house at Cobbs, which he inherited from his mother, into a formal school. Cobbs then became the first school for the education of the deaf in the United States.

Bolling Hall is thus significant for its early associations with the deaf education in this county. It is also the earliest remaining house connected with this important early Virginia family since Cobbs was destroyed by fire in 1829. Bolling Hall further survives as one of the few remaining colonial plantation houses of the upper James region; one that retains much of its original fabric, as well as its unspoiled rural setting.
