Powhatan County wa	s formed in 1777	from the eastern	part of Cumberlan
County and was nam			he had mulad the

County and was named to honor the Indian "emperor" who had ruled the tribes of Eastern Virginia in the early years of the colony. According to the act establishing the new county, a town to contain the county buildings was to be laid out near the center of the county. Originally called Scottville after General Charles Scott of the Continental Army, the name of the town or county seat was later changed to Powhatan Court House because it was being confused with Scottsville in nearby Albemarle County.

It is believed that the first permanent court house was erected in 1783 since an appeal for bids on such was issued in that year. The present court house was erected in 1848-49 to replace the earlier one which by that time had begun to decay. There is strong circumstantial evidence that the design for the new building was the work of the famous American architect Alexander Jackson Davis. Prior to the building of the court house. Davis had designed Belmead, the plantation mansion of Phillip St. George Cocke, located several miles to the north. Cocke served as one of the building commissioners for the new court house, and the county order book entry for January 7, 1850, states that the building was built "according to the plan and drawing procured by the undersigned Ph. St. George Cocke." Because of the unusually sophisticated and knowledgeable handling of Greek architectural forms on this superb little building, it seems obvious that an architect of considerable skill was involved. However, at present, it can only be assumed that Cocke's now lost drawings were executed by A. J. Davis; the builder was Lewis Johnson of Hanover County.

The town of Powhatan Court House is significant not only because of the architectural quality of its court house, but also because of the unspoiled character and completeness of the courthouse complex itself. Still standing are the former clerk's office which was probably built in the same period as the first court house, the former brick jail, and the impressive lateeighteenth century Scott's or Powhatan Tavern adjacent to the court square.
