Period of Significance (justification)

The proposed period of significance for the Old Wythe Historic District encompasses the period from 1891 until 1957. This is the primary period of suburban development for the district and is when the majority of buildings were constructed. It begins with the first platting and subdivision of land by the Newport News, Hampton, and Old Point Development Company and ends with the construction of I-64 which opened new areas for development further outside of the city and marked the end of steady development in the district.

SUMMARY DESCRIPTION

The Old Wythe Historic District is a large residential area of Hampton, Virginia, on the southwest side of the city bounded roughly by Kecoughtan Road, Hanover Street, Hampton Roads, and Pear Avenue. The historic district is located roughly halfway between the central business districts of Hampton and Newport News, and has been shaped by the growth and development of both of these cities. The neighborhood evolved over time from a mix of planned and organic development and is generally composed of four early- to mid-twentieth century residential subdivisions, the Newport News, Hampton, and Old Point Land Company developments; Indian River Park; J.C. Robinson's developments in Wythe Crescent and Robinson Creek; and the Armstrong Land and Improvement Company's Hampton Roads Avenues, each with their own patterns and distinct characteristics. Additionally, Chesapeake Avenue is lined with many grand waterfront homes constructed along a streetcar line before the area was subdivided, and these were later incorporated into the planned developments. The area is typical of national trends in late-nineteenth and early- to mid-twentieth century streetcar suburbs in both architectural composition and characteristic grid pattern layouts.

SETTING

The Old Wythe Historic District was first developed in the 1880s when several large tracts of land were broken up and sold to various land investors and speculators. This included at first, several wealthy northern entrepreneurs who established seafood businesses and built their homes along the shore of Hampton Roads. True suburban development began just a few years later, spurred by the growth of the nearby Newport News railroad and shipping industries and was in full-swing by the 1930s with the massive military and government build-up in the Hampton Roads area leading up to World War II.

The historic district stretches for nearly a mile along the shore of Hampton Roads between the cities of Hampton and Newport News, but is technically within the Hampton city limits. Beginning with the earliest homes constructed along the shoreline, and with development pushing inland through the years, the district is bounded to the south by Hampton Roads. Its northern boundary is Kecoughtan Road, one of the earliest connective routes between the two cities, and a developmental division since its construction. To the west it is bounded by Pear Avenue, which has been a border between the two municipalities since 1927, and to the east by Hanover Street and Church Creek, a natural barrier that delineates the Wythe area from other parts of Hampton. The district generally stretches four-blocks deep, although the street and block patterns are not consistent the entire length of the neighborhood because it is composed of several subdivisions platted at different times by various developers.

The district is composed generally of six primary subdivisions, along with assorted informal and earlier areas of development. The earliest planned development in the district occupies a large portion of the western edge, and was laid out by the Newport News, Hampton, and Old Point Development Company in 1891. In 1902, a small area called the Newport News Riverview Development was platted just to the east and is set on the peninsula of land between the forks of Robinson (then called Curle's) Creek. Indian River Park was the next formal subdivision, platted in 1916, and is located centrally in the district, on the peninsula of land bounded by the Indian River and its offshoot. Hampton Roads Avenues occupies the majority of the eastern portion of the district and was laid out in the 1920s. Wythe Crescent and Wythe Place were the last two formal subdivisions platted in the 1930s, and occupy the area between Indian River Park and Robinson Creek.

Streets and blocks throughout the district are typically laid out in a gridded fashion, although in some places the waterways interrupt this pattern, such as the Indian River Park section. Another section where a strict grid pattern is not followed is in J.C. Robinson's Wythe Place and Wythe Crescent subdivisions. As an area not platted until the 1930s, these subdivisions exhibit the more curvilinear and generally irregular street pattern that was becoming popular at that time and continued though the modern era. Street widths vary throughout the district and even within their respective subdivisions. Streets in the Newport News at al. development are 40 feet wide and generally have curbs. Hampton Roads Avenues streets are typically 35 feet wide with curbs. Streets in the Wythe Crescent and Wythe Place subdivisions are generally 30 feet wide and even narrower flanking Robinson Park, although all have curbs as well. Wythe Place also has one of the two divided boulevards in the district, consisting of two 15 feet lanes divided by a grassy median. There is also a grassy circle in the middle of a wide intersection where this boulevard and several other roads come together. Indian River Park's infrastructure is by far the most embellished and complete in the district. Streets are slightly narrower in general, at 25 feet wide, although all have curbs. The neighborhood is divided by Powhatan Parkway, the second divided boulevard in the district. It has 15 feet lanes on each side of a landscaped median and circles at each of the intersections. The road begins at Indian River where it crosses from its intersection with Chesapeake Avenue over an ornamental two-lane bridge.

Pedestrian infrastructure varies throughout the district, although most areas have some form of sidewalks. Sidewalks in the Newport News et al. and Hampton Roads Avenues areas are irregular and inconsistent along the through streets and do not exist along the cross streets. All of Indian River Park has sidewalks, and it is also the only section of the district illuminated by ornamental streetlights, an original component of the design. All of Wythe Crescent and Wythe Place also have sidewalks. The Newport News Riverview Development area does not.

Lot sizes throughout the district vary depending on location and associated subdivision. Most are typical suburban properties and are in the 1/6- to 1/4-acre size range. The lots in the two older subdivisions, the Newport News, Hampton, and Old Point Development and Indian River Park, are slightly smaller and narrower than their later counterparts. Ranging from 32 – 60 feet wide and 132 – 150 feet deep, these parcels are supplemented by alleys that run down the middle of each block for access to garages. The lots in the later subdivisions such as Hampton Roads Avenues and J.C. Robinson's two Wythe plats area are typically larger and wider ranging from 50 – 75 feet wide and up to 200 feet deep. These areas do not include alleyways and therefore the individual parcels are often wide enough for a driveway. The properties along Chesapeake are the largest in the district and range from ¼ acre up to ¾ acre. Because these properties were developed individually and not part of a platted subdivision, their lot dimensions vary, but are typically much deeper than their platted neighbors.

Building sizes also vary somewhat throughout the district due to the complex development pattern and the presence of numerous building forms and styles, but all fall within the size and scale of common middle- to upper-class suburban dwellings from their time period. Nearly all of the houses are modest, one- and two-story homes, with only a few larger two-and-a-half and three-story homes constructed by the wealthy at the turn-of-the-twentieth-century along Chesapeake Avenue. Despite the various styles and sizes throughout the district, the buildings blend harmoniously due to consistent setbacks and orientation to the streets. A consistent pattern of landscaping and tree-lined streets also helps to unify the district and lend a cohesive feel to its various neighborhoods.

ARCHITECTURAL ANALYSIS

While the various areas that make up the Old Wythe Historic District convey a cohesive and unified feel from many shared characteristics; each individual subdivision still exhibits its own unique character from its relative development trend and architectural patterns. As a whole, the district retains a diverse collection of middle and upper-class residential architecture that represents a wide-range of typical and popular styles from the late-nineteenth through the mid-twentieth century. The majority of historic properties in the district are single-family homes, although a school and two churches are also within the boundaries, as are several bridges and a park. As a suburban neighborhood, residential buildings accounts for nearly all of the development. Throughout the twentieth century, Kecoughtan Road along the north and west boundaries evolved into a mixed commercial/residential area and therefore properties facing the road have been excluded from the district.

The earliest building constructed in Old Wythe, is the 1849 John Simpson House at present-day 3629 Chesapeake Avenue. This Greek-Revival home was originally part of the larger Simpson plantation and later Daniel Cummings' Otley estate. The house is a symmetrical one-story frame building topped with a hipped roof with a pair of interior chimneys. It presently sits on a residential lot facing Chesapeake Avenue, however its architectural style makes it distinct from the rest of the neighborhood. The next earliest homes in the area are the large estates constructed by several of the wealthy businessmen who invested in the land and seafood industry in the first few decades after the Civil War. Two such homes are those constructed for J.C. Robinson, the first in 1888, located at 1600 Chesapeake Avenue, and the second in 1900 at 1500 Chesapeake Avenue. The other is the house constructed for Charles Hewins in 1892 at 2404 Chesapeake Avenue. Each of these homes exhibit Victorian influences, although they are distinctly vernacular. These homes are two of the larger buildings in the district, and set the tone for many of the higher-style upper-class residences constructed along Chesapeake Avenue and the shoreline streetcar line in the ensuing decades. This includes several high-style Queen Anne, Shingle-style, and Colonial Revival residences. While there are a good number of smaller and later homes constructed along Chesapeake Avenue after it was incorporated into planned subdivisions, the grand homes flanking the road stand out as a reminder of the area's pre-suburban development by the wealthy upper class.

The western portions of the district comprising the earliest planned development, and to a lesser extent, the central and eastern portions that were slower to develop, contain a good number of assorted smaller and simpler Victorian-influenced homes. These homes were constructed from the 1890s through the first decade of the twentieth century and include Folk Victorians, traditional and Free-Classic Queen Annes, Shingle-style, and a variety of other Victorian-influenced vernacular residences. These less ornate examples of Victorian-influenced homes are still typically two-story frame buildings, feature steep roofs, and shingled gables and bay windows, however do not include the complex rooflines, saw work, or other embellishments that those along Chesapeake Avenue do.

Suburban development began to increase in the years just before and during World War I when dozens of modest middle-class homes were constructed throughout the district on the lots and blocks lining the newly platted gridded streets. Typical of the era, homes from this period consist of assorted one- and two-story Craftsman styles and building forms including bungalows, foursquares, and early examples of eclectic and revival styles. These buildings are both one- and two-story and are generally vernacular interpretations of these styles. Frame construction, front porches with battered columns, shallow-pitch roofs, exposed rafter tails, and paired windows are typical features of these buildings. These types of homes are common throughout most of the district.

By the late 1920s and especially through the 1930s and 1940s, development was in full swing. Hundreds of homes were constructed, filling in the majority of parcels throughout the historic district. The largest period of construction was in the years immediately before and during the U.S.'s entry into World War II when nearly a quarter of the district's homes were built in a four-year span. Overall, the 1930s and 1940s were responsible for half of the homes in the district. Buildings constructed during this time represent the typical and popular styles of the era and reflect the modest, middle-class property owners that built most of them. The homes exhibit various revival styles including the traditional Colonial, Dutch Colonial, Cape Cod, Tudor, and several exotic-revivals. These homes are one- and two-story, and are a mix of frame and masonry construction. Again, these buildings are typically vernacular interpretations of the styles and exhibit very little in the way of embellishment. Any ornamentation is typically focused on porches and entrances. They are present throughout the district, but in greatest numbers in the eastern portion of the district where this time-period was the height of development.

Minimal Traditional homes also comprise a significant portion of construction during this period, particularly towards the latter years during the post-war housing boom. Various forms of the Minimal Traditional including the one-story cross-gable, and the two-story side-gable with jettied second floor are present. The Minimal Traditional continued to represent the bulk of housing construction through the post-war boom, although a few revivals were constructed at that time as well. By the 1950s, these styles were joined by one-story ranches and other simplistic mid-century forms that represent the typical house form in the historic district through the 1960s. These homes infilled many of the lots throughout both ends of the district, however are by far most common in the central portions that were not subdivided until the 1930s and 1940s.

Very few homes in the district date to the 1970s and only a handful date from the 1980s through the present day. Most of the construction since that time appears to represent building replacement and not raw construction on vacant lots. A variety of styles are used, however most represent modern interpretations of older styles prevalent throughout the district. Modern Colonial Revivals and Neo-Victorians are the most common followed by homes exhibiting a blend of stylistic influences and some with no particular stylistic details.

In addition to the primary dwellings, many properties throughout the district have assorted outbuildings and secondary resources. This includes a large number of extant original and historic outbuildings such as garages, garage/apartment combinations, other secondary dwellings, and a variety of storage buildings, workshops, and other domestic outbuildings. There are also a large number of nonhistoric and later outbuildings such as larger garages, storage buildings, workshops, etc. In addition to all of these substantial outbuildings, prefabricated sheds and other un-affixed structures are also common on many properties throughout the district.

INTEGRITY

Old Wythe retains a high level of historical integrity both as a district as a whole, as well as the individual properties that make it up. As a whole, the district continues to exhibit the street and block patterns that were developed organically and by planned subdivision from the late-nineteenth century through the mid-twentieth century. Roads have not been widened or rerouted nor has any modern infrastructure interrupted these patterns. Waterways that were dredged and incorporated into neighborhood designs have not been significantly altered, nor have designed open spaces such as Robinson Park or the grassy strip between Chesapeake Avenue and Hampton Roads been developed.

The historic development patterns are also retained with very little nonhistoric infill. More than 90% of the homes in the district were constructed during the period of significance, while those that were constructed later typically represent modern infill into the sparse and few lots that remained empty until that time. These buildings typically do not detract from the character of the district as they were built with complementing styles and similar size, scale, and massing. They do not confuse however, as they are typically delineated by a larger setback from the street than the neighboring historic construction. There has been very seldom demolition of the historic building stock for modern construction in the district.

So do the individual buildings and properties that compose Old Wythe retain their historic design and character. While most homes exhibit typical and expected maintenance and updating, modifications are typically nonintrusive and do not significantly detract from historical integrity. Replacement doors and windows are the most common alterations, followed by the addition of vinyl and aluminum siding. Small additions to the rear and sides of homes are typical; however additions to the front of homes and enclosed porches are not common, nor are large additions that drastically alter the scale and massing of homes. Many buildings retain original outbuildings as well, and although newer outbuildings have been constructed behind many homes, these additions typically do not detract from the property.

HISTORIC DISTRICT INVENTORY

The inventory is organized alphabetically by street then numerically by address. Contributing and noncontributing status is based on the period of significance from 1891 to 1957, the areas of significance including Community Planning and Development and Architecture, and the retention of historical integrity. Several properties constructed before the period of significance are also considered contributing, not for their earlier history, but for their later association with the suburban development of Old Wythe.

This inventory includes all primary resources; historic and nonhistoric, throughout the district. It also includes all historic outbuildings as well as nonhistoric outbuildings that are substantial in size and scale. It does not include the assorted small and minor secondary resources such as prefabricated or temporary sheds, or any other minor resource not fixed to the ground that are not substantial in size or scale, and do not convey the significance of the district.

SUMMARY

The Old Wythe Historic District is a cohesive late-nineteenth through mid-twentieth century residential neighborhood that reflects characteristic national development trends and architectural composition as applied to Tidewater Virginia. The district began as rural agricultural land; however in the years following the Civil War, the economy of the area was in transition. Many of the large tracts of land had to be broken apart and sold to satisfy owners' debts acquired during the war. Concurrently, a large influx of investment by northern entrepreneurs was creating new potential for business and industry in the area. With the opening of the Chesapeake & Ohio (C&O) Railway and Newport News Dry Dock and Shipping Company, real estate development became a "higher use" for the land and several subdivisions were platted. Development was aided by the introduction of streetcar service along Electric Avenue (today's Victoria Boulevard) and later along "Boulevard" or Chesapeake Avenue, linking Newport News with Hampton and Old Point Comfort's resorts. The wealthy built high-style architect-designed homes along the routes of the streetcar and along the shore of Hampton Roads. Development increased further in the 1910s and 1920s with the advent of the automobile, and numerous middle-class families moved to the area and built characteristic modest and vernacular homes. Development within the historic district reached its zenith in the years just before and during World War II when the massive military build up in the area created a tremendous need for housing and hundreds of mid-century revivals and modern homes filled in the district. Development continued through the post-war boom of the 1950s until the area was nearly completely built-out and the coming of Interstate Highway 64 opened up new areas for residential development further out of the city.

As such, the Old Wythe Historic District is considered significant at the local level and eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion A in the area of Community Planning and Development; and under Criterion C in the area of Architecture. The period of significance in the district is from 1891 to 1957, beginning with the first purchase of land in the area by a developer, the Newport News, Hampton, and Old Point Development Company, and ending with the opening of I-64 that opened new areas to the north and west up for development and marked the end of consistent development in Old Wythe.

HISTORIC BACKGROUND

When the English arrived on the Virginia Peninsula in 1607, the region was inhabited by the Kicotan [Kecoughtan] Indians, a tribe of the confederation of the Algonquin under Powhatan. A small village was located within the general area of present-day Hampton that was raided and seized by the settlers in 1610. The cultivated fields and crops were maintained and a small settlement they named Kecoughtan in recognition of the native inhabitants was established.¹ In 1616, the First Church of Kecoughtan (no longer extant) was built near the present-day intersection of Kecoughtan Road and LaSalle Avenue along Church Creek, and is recognized as the "first church of the oldest continuous settlement of English origin in America."

In 1619, the settlement was renamed Elizabeth City to better reflect its British control. Following armed conflict and a subsequent treaty with the local tribes in 1622, land grants were provided in the area, and in 1634, Elizabeth City County became one of the first eight counties in Virginia. The settlement continued to grow throughout the seventeenth century and in 1706, the Virginia Assembly established a customs district there and officially chartered the town under the name Hampton.

During this time and well through the Colonial and Antebellum periods, the lands to the west of Hampton encompassing present-day Old Wythe remained largely rural with only isolated plantations and homesteads.² One of these, Celey's Plantation, was located just to the east of Salter's Creek, near the western end of the Old Wythe neighborhood. In 1624, Abraham Bush patented land in the vicinity of Salter's Creek, and a portion of this (roughly to present-day Claremont Avenue) was sold to Thomas Celey, who is said to have established experimental gardens to determine plants suitable to local soils there. The property at 225 Chesapeake Avenue to the west of Old Wythe is believed to be the site of Celey's residence, however the house has long since been lost.³ Thomas Celey the younger, a burgess from Warwick Plantation in 1629 and from Warwick County in 1639, sold the property in 1691 to William Wilson, a successful merchant who acquired the 2,000 surrounding acres. It became the plantation seat of the Cary family when it passed with his daughter's hand to Miles Cary and to Miles' son, Wilson Miles Cary. George Washington is supposed to have courted one of Wilson Miles Cary's daughters until he was discouraged by her father, who considering young George too poor a match.

A later plantation in the area was that of John Simpson, located just west of Church Creek near the eastern end of Old Wythe. Simpson built his home, which still stands today as the only pre-Civil War building in the area, at 3629 Chesapeake Avenue, in 1849. During the Civil War, the rural lands in the Old Wythe area provided a vantage point for the most pivotal event of the war in the area, the Battle of the Ironclads that took place just off the coast in the James River. Local legend claims that George Armstrong Custer watched the Battle of the Ironclads from the porch roof of John Simpson's house. A Works Progress Administration guide first published in 1940 and re-issued in 1942 asserts the following:

On the afternoon of March 8, 1862, occurred the battle that changed naval warfare. The Virginia, formerly the Merrimac, a wooden ship which had been sunk, raised by the Confederates, and converted into an ironclad, attacked the Federal fleet, which was armed with 204 guns and aided by land batteries. By six o'clock the Virginia had sunk the Cumberland, burned the Congress, driven the Minnesota ashore, and compelled the St. Lawrence and the Roanoke to seek shelter under the guns of Fort Monroe. On March 9 the Virginia encountered the Monitor, an ironclad more heavily armored and more efficient by reason of her light draught and revolving gun turret. For four hours the two ironclads battered each other, until at last a shell from the Virginia exploded on the eyeslit of the Monitor's pilot house, blinding her

Following the war, county demographics changed enormously due to the burning and subsequent evacuation of Hampton. Many of the residents were left in debt and many more left the town to seek better opportunity. In return, there was a large influx of freedmen and Northern entrepreneurs to the area. The depressed economy in Hampton and throughout the American South provided a ripe environment for business investment for those with capital available. As a result of shifts in politics and of municipal organization to promote economic growth, Elizabeth City County was divided into three new districts: the Town of Hampton, Chesapeake, and for the first time recognized as such – Wythe, named for George Wythe, a signer of the Declaration of Independence who was born in Elizabeth City County near present-day Langley Air Force Base.⁵

During this time, the Wythe area was still owned by several large landowners, although most were in debt and property ownership was soon to shift. A comparison of an 1870 map with an 1892 map shows how the area transitioned during the reconstruction.⁶ In 1870, the primary landholders in Wythe south of the Road to Hampton (Victoria Boulevard) are Daniel Cummings (northernmost 156 acres and encompassing the former John Simpson estate); George M. Bates (central 906 acres); and William T. Smith and W.M. Vaughan (234 acres in southwestern portion still labeled as Celey's Tract). By 1892, most of these large landholdings had been broken into smaller tracts and the beginnings of suburban Wythe is evident.⁷

Suburban Wythe

Early Development

The largest tract of land owned by Bates was one of the first to be broken up as tax debts and claims arose upon his death in 1873. At that time, the courts took most of the land which was in turn sold off. At first, portions of the Bates land were purchased by northerners John C. Robinson and Charles E. Hewins.⁸ Both of these men were northern entrepreneurs who came to Hampton to invest in business and not necessarily real estate; however both found themselves in the land development market within a few decades.

J.C. Robinson had moved to Hampton from Massachusetts in search of business opportunities after the Civil War and invested in the growing local seafood business. He established a fish and oystering plant on the former Bates land at the mouth of Smith Creek, later renamed Robinson Creek, and built a home for his family nearby at what is now 1600 Chesapeake Avenue in 1888.⁹ He built a second, grander home next to it at what is now 1500 Chesapeake Avenue in 1900. In 1914 he added a brick business to his ventures with the organization of the Clay Products Company which imported bricks by barge that were sold to local builders. Robinson later helped to establish the First National Bank of Hampton and started the first local telephone company. Upon retirement in the 1930s, Robinson shifted his focus to real estate and subdivided most of his property. On his land is what would become the Wythe Place and Wythe Crescent neighborhoods as well as smaller tracts along Orchard and Osprey Avenues.¹⁰

Captain Charles Hewins also established a seafood business in Wythe along the shore of Hampton Roads and there too had a large home built near the Indian River Creek inlet at what is now 2404 Chesapeake Avenue in 1890. Hewins entered the real estate market in the 1910s, when he partnered with several others to plat the Indian River Park neighborhood.

Planned Development

The dwellings J.C. Robinson and Charles Hewins built for themselves were the first homes constructed in Old Wythe during this period and are the two oldest remaining in the neighborhood besides the 1849 John Simpson House. Although these men did not subdivide their Old Wythe properties until well into the twentieth century, speculation and formal land development was taking place in the west end of the historic district as of 1891. This early planned development in Old Wythe can be attributed to the rapid growth of industry in Newport News after it was established as the eastern terminus of the C&O railroad in 1880. Just several years after that the Chesapeake Dry Dock and Construction Company was created and additional business and industry followed.¹¹ These ventures created a tremendous need for worker housing in the region surrounding them and within a few years, the housing situation in Newport News became so dire that the Daily Press stated:

*If homes cannot be obtained, mechanics who come here to work will leave their families in other cities. The necessity for such a course would operate strongly against the growth and prosperity of Newport News. There is abundant capital in this city, without looking elsewhere, to build all the houses desired.*¹²

Speculators and land investors responded by purchasing land all around Newport News and selling smaller lots to the industry employees. One such development in Wythe was undertaken by the Newport News, Hampton, and Old Point Development Company. In 1891, the company purchased the large tract of land that formerly composed the Celey's plantation just across Salter's Creek from Newport News.¹³ A gridded layout of streets and blocks was platted and individual lots began to sell soon after. A private investor, Lizzie Darnaby, also provided lots for sale when she subdivided a small tract of land she had purchased from the Bates estate just east of the Newport News, Hampton, and Old Point Company development in 1900 that would become the Claremont Avenue development.¹⁴

Growth and construction in these developments was fueled by the Hampton, Newport News, and Old Point electric railway built contemporaneously in 1891 that connected Newport News to Hampton and the large

Wythe area in between. The line was built by the Newport News Street Railway Company, founded by Colonel Carter Braxton, a civil engineer, in 1890 and ran northeast from Newport News to connect with John Darling's Hampton and Old Point Electric Railway in the "Victoria Boulevard" suburb of Hampton built just a year earlier. The line began operation with horse-drawn cars, however was running with electric cars by Christmas Eve of 1892. A road flanking the railway was also built and appropriately named Electric Avenue.¹⁵

Development occurred slowly but steadily in the Newport News, Hampton and Old Point Development Company tract and Darnaby's tract and by the turn of the century, there were dozens of homes built in the area.¹⁶ Development in the eastern reaches of Old Wythe nearer Hampton was a little slower in these early years as planned subdivision had not yet occurred. Robinson and Hewins had not yet subdivided their lands on the peninsula between Robinson Creek and Indian River, instead continuing to operate their seafood businesses. East of the Indian River, development was limited to a number of lots and homes flanking Hampton Roads Avenue built by the Armstrong Land and Development Company to provide access to the Hampton Roads Golf and Country Club, extending from Hampton Roads Avenue to present-day East Avenue, established in 1893.¹⁷

The first two decades of the twentieth century brought an influx in development throughout Old Wythe, spurred not just by the Newport News industry, but from the desire of wealthier residents of both Newport News and Hampton to escape the confines of the city to the more idyllic setting of the Wythe waterfront. One of the largest factors in promoting this trend was the construction of a second electric streetcar line built by the Hampton Traction Company along the Hampton Roads shoreline in 1905.¹⁸ The line traveled south from the older Hampton, Newport News, and Old Point Electric Railway just west of Church Creek down present-day LaSalle Avenue, and then followed the shoreline through Wythe until it crossed a drawbridge over Salter's Creek and entered Newport News.¹⁹ It was flanked by a road named "Boulevard" that became the predecessor to present-day Chesapeake Avenue. Right-of-way was donated by Colonel Armstrong of the Armstrong Land and Development Company, Hewins, and Robinson who in return were able to utilize the line for their own real estate investment. Residential lots were platted adjacent to the road and streetcar line, and within a few years, dozens of grand homes lined the route.²⁰

The year 1907 brought a flurry of excitement to the area when the Jamestown Exposition was held across Hampton Roads Harbor in Norfolk. Hotels in Hampton, including several along the Boulevard, offered guests the opportunity to stay across the harbor, and take a temporary ferry that ran from the present-day end of Manteo Road to Norfolk. Many of these hotels and "tourist homes" along the water remained after the exposition and were a mainstay of Boulevard well into the mid-twentieth century.²¹ The exposition also heightened the awareness of the area's colonial past; no doubt a factor in the increased prevalence of Colonial Revival architecture in the area from that date forward.

In 1910, Kecoughtan Road, the first paved road connecting Newport News and Hampton was constructed allowing increased access to the developing real estate in the Wythe area.²² The opening of Kecoughtan was an important factor in the future development of Wythe as it created another connection to the area between the two cities a little further inland that would be more affordable to the middle-class than the waterfront lots adjacent to Boulevard. That was realized in 1916 with the opening of the Indian River Park subdivision on Capt. Hewins' land between Kecoughtan and the Indian River.

World War I and the opening of Langley Field (now Langley Air Force Base) in Hampton added to the housing demand and began the increased occupancy of Wythe by military and government personnel. Many pilots from the air field and scientists from the associated National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics Langley Memorial Laboratory (the predecessor of NASA Langley Research Center) took residence in Wythe by renting rear apartments that were a common fixture in Wythe.²³ Development in Old Wythe begin to increase further in the 1920s, fueled by military and civilian growth as the automobile rose in popularity and more middle-class people could more easily move outside of the city. This trend coupled with the continued construction along the water by the wealthy made for a relatively eclectic fashion of development, with a mix of modest homes and grander estates. The residential core was served by an expanding business district along Kecoughtan Road and several schools, churches, and a fire department also opened during this time to keep up with the growing population.²⁴ Pressure for housing pushed into the eastern areas of Wythe and forced the golf club to shut down, making room for residential lots in Armstrong Land and Improvements' "Hampton Roads Avenues" area by the mid-1920s.²⁵

The streetcar era in Wythe came to an abrupt end in 1933 when a hurricane caused the worst natural destruction of the area in nearly two centuries and caused irreparable damage to the Boulevard tracks. Ridership had already been on the decline over the previous years as the automobile replaced it, and therefore the decision was made not to repair the tracks. The streetcar line further inland along Electric Avenue continued in service, but only for a few more years, until it too was decommissioned and replaced with bus service in 1946.

The closing of the streetcar lines was only a minor setback to development as the rise of the automobile coupled with the massive build-up leading to World War II fostered the largest growth in the Wythe area yet. In a time when most of the country was in deep recession and very little home construction or investment was taking place, Old Wythe was experiencing its greatest wave of development. This influx is no doubt tied to the expansion of the government and military presence in the area fueled by industries in Hampton and Newport News, and installations throughout the region. It was during this time that J.C. Robinson subdivided his land between Indian River Park and the Newport News, Hampton, and Old Point Development Company tract at this time to create Wythe Place and Wythe Crescent.²⁶ These two tracts more or less completed the subdivision of Old Wythe, although numerous vacant lots still remained throughout the earlier plats. By the end of the 1930s and the first few years of the 1940s, both of Robinson's subdivisions and a large percentage of vacant lots throughout the area were filled with modest middle-class housing. The few lots in Old Wythe that remained vacant through World War II were mostly filled within the first few years of the post-war boom. By 1960, only a handful of empty lots remained and development came almost to a halt. Interstate 64 was constructed just three years earlier in 1957 and opened up large new areas for development further up the peninsula to the west of Hampton and Newport News, further leading to the slow-down of development in Old Wythe.

In the decades since then, nearly all of those still vacant lots have slowly been infilled with modern construction. Some were annexed by adjacent property owners to expand their homes and in a few cases, lots have been combined and an older home torn down to make room for large, double-lot modern homes. Additional commercial development has occurred along Kecoughtan; sometimes through the conversion of historic residences to commercial use, others through demolition to allow for new commercial construction. Despite the ongoing commercial development along Kecoughtan and the occasional construction of a new home in the residential area between it and the water, the Old Wythe neighborhood appears much as it did was when the bulk of remaining lots were built upon during the boom following World War II.

Planned Subdivisions

Newport News, Hampton, and Old Point Development Company Holdings

Newport News Point in Elizabeth City County is the site Collis P. Huntington had chosen for the national eastern terminus of his C&O Rail line in 1880 and two years later, the Virginia Assembly transferred a large portion of the county where the terminal was located to Warwick County. The City of Newport News was also created at this time. The industrial growth of Newport News continued in 1886 when the Chesapeake Dry Dock and Construction Company, predecessor of the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company opened.²⁷ The industrial growth in Newport News following the establishment of these industries created a demand for labor, housing, and infrastructure in Newport News and beyond.

The first area of Old Wythe purchased and subdivided by a land development company was that in the southwestern portion of the district that formerly composed portions of the historic Celey's tract just across Salter's Creek from Newport News. In 1891, the tract was purchased by the Newport News, Hampton, and Old Point Development Company who laid out a gridded pattern of streets and blocks.²⁸ Following a typical and popular theme for Victorian-era subdivisions across the nation, the streets were named after species of trees including Walnut, Mulberry, Ash, Cedar, Sycamore, Poplar, Maple, Pear, Cherry, Apple, Locust, and Greenbrier. Residential lots, most measuring 45 feet by 132 feet and 60 feet by 132 feet, sold quickly and dozens of homes were built within the first decade.²⁹ Construction was focused on the western streets nearest Newport News and in 1916, this densely developed portion of the area bounded by Salters Creek, Hampton Roads, 5th Street, and Pear Avenue obtained permission to incorporate as a town with the name of Kecoughtan.

The Town of Kecoughtan was later annexed by the city of Newport News in 1927, leaving Elizabeth City County with a new western boundary at Pear Avenue.³⁰

The portions of the tract east of Pear Avenue in Elizabeth City County, and later Hampton, were slower to develop. A number of lots were sold and homes built along Locust and Greenbriar in the last decade of the nineteenth century and first decade of the twentieth century; however it was not until the 1910s and 1920s that the majority of construction took place. The types of homes constructed indicate the area was populated more by foremen and upper-level managers than the working class as evidenced by a variety of substantial, yet still modest dwellings including assorted Victorian-era styles, Craftsmans, and revivals.

Indian River Park

In 1916, landowner Charles Hewins, who had already established himself in Wythe with an oystering business and built a large home on Hampton Roads, partnered with fellow investor William Howe and land developers Frank Hooper and George Hardy to plat a large subdivision on the tract of his land in the peninsula bordered by Indian River and Kecoughtan Road. The group incorporated under the name "Midway Realty Cooperation" and laid out a pattern of streets and blocks between the two branches of the river (Indian River and Wythe Crescent).³¹ To honor the Indian heritage in the river which borders it, the subdivision was named Indian River Park and the streets were given names Pochin Place, Pocahontas Place, Secota Drive, Canoe (later renamed O'Canoe) Place, and Cherokee Drive (later renamed Chincoteague). The central boulevard leading through the neighborhood was named Powhatan Parkway.³² As part of the platting, Indian River was dredged, allowing it to fully open into Hampton Roads, providing residents along the river access to the open water. The seawalls built around the neighborhood included small private cutouts and stairs for watercraft. The entrance to the subdivision was adorned by matching wood lodges next to the wood bridge that carried Powhatan Parkway over Indian River from Boulevard. These lodges also served as streetcar stops on the Boulevard (Chesapeake) Hampton Traction Company line.³³ The current bridge was constructed in 1997 and is a replica of the original.

Following the platting, the Midway Realty Corp did not sell lots themselves, instead selling the entire subdivision on June 22, 1916, to the Boulevard Development Cooperation of Newport News to individually market and convey lots.³⁴ Lots sold quickly and the majority of the houses in the Indian River Park subdivision were built between 1916 and 1940. Lots nearest the Indian River, along Powhatan Parkway and Harbor Drive, were the first to be built on.³⁵ Lot prices were $450 to $1,250 and plans included electricity, sewers, streetlights, sidewalks, and a boat harbor.³⁶ Indian River Park appealed to both the middle- and upper-middle class and its homes reflect that, in part from the restrictions enforced by the developers. At the sales' office located near the Powhatan Parkway Bridge, were lists of pre-approved home builders and house plans. To ensure that the homes built were to the highest standard, each lot deed specified that the cost of a home be at least $3,000 and that plans be approved by the development company.³⁷ The dwellings within Indian River Park represent a large variety of revival styles, as well as Prairie, Craftsman, Foursquare, and Bungalow houses.

Hampton Roads Avenues

The Hampton Roads Avenues area of Old Wythe comprises much of the eastern portion of the historic district and is bounded generally by Hampton Roads Avenue, Hampton Roads, East Avenue, and Kecoughtan Road. This area was purchased by the Armstrong family from the Bates tract in 1888 for speculation and was developed in phases over the late-nineteenth and early-twentieth centuries. In 1893, most of the area was developed into the Hampton Roads Golf and Country Club, the first such club in the region. The 9-hole course covered 2,661 yards, with holes marked with traps and natural hazards. The clubhouse was located in the 100 block of Hampton Roads Avenue and was the starting and ending point of the course. In 1898 an agreement was made with the hotels at Old Point Comfort, where they would help with the cost of maintaining the links and, in exchange, they would promote the golf course as one of their recreational amenities.³⁸

The club was fed by the new electric streetcar line along Electric Boulevard, constructed in 1892, that lead into Hampton and its hotels. In 1905, when the second streetcar line through Wythe opened up along Boulevard (Chesapeake Avenue), another stop was created to serve the club.³⁹ The new streetcar line brought with it additional opportunity for residential development, and the Armstrongs, under the Armstrong Land Improvement Company, platted a grid of blocks and streets in the area between the golf course and Hampton Roads (south of present-day Kenmore Avenue).

By the 1920s, development pressure had further increased, and coupled with the opening of a competing 18-hole golf course near Phoebus, owned by the Chamberlin Hotel; the Hampton Roads Golf and Country Club was eventually closed and the property subdivided into additional residential lots.⁴⁰ The gridded streets previously laid out below the course were extended to Kecoughtan Road. In keeping with the Indian heritage in the area, the streets were named Manteo, Allegheny, Shenandoah, Algonquin, and Cherokee. Slightly larger lots than throughout the earlier subdivisions were created to allow for driveways from the streets, rather than alleyways in the rear. They average 50 – 75 feet wide and are generally 200 feet deep.

The dwellings in the area reflect the development pattern and trends and include a variety of house sizes and styles. The largest and earliest homes of the upper-middle class line Hampton Roads Avenue and the streets in the lower section of the development closest to Boulevard. This includes two-story late-Victorian styled homes, assorted Craftsman, and some early revivals. The upper blocks in the area contain generally smaller and later homes, although still predominantly two-story and in similar styles. While there are no Victorian styled homes, Craftsman and Revivals constitute the largest percentage of buildings, with assorted two-story Minimal Traditionals filling in during later years.

Wythe Crescent and Wythe Place

Wythe Crescent and Wythe Place are two of the later subdivisions platted in the Old Wythe area. Both are on land previously part of the Bates tract that was subdivided and sold off in the late nineteenth century. This particular area set between Indian River Park and the eastern ravine of Robinson Creek was purchased by J.C. Robinson and later developed by him in the 1930s.⁴¹ These two neighborhoods represent a transition from the strict grid pattern seen throughout much of Old Wythe to the beginning of the more curvilinear patterns seen throughout mid- to late- twentieth century plats. Streets and blocks are laid out around the large central Robinson Park, the focal point of the two neighborhoods. This park, which is not simply a large grassy area, was originally built with a large shelter in the middle for families to gather.⁴² It is the only formal park in the Old Wythe area. To the west of the triangular park, in the half-circular piece of land between it and the Robinson Creek ravine, is the appropriately named Wythe Crescent loop. Wythe Crescent consists of one street, of the same name, with lots on each side. Because of the irregular shape of the land, lot sizes vary but are generally 50 feet wide and range up to 200 feet deep. To the south and northeast of Robinson Park is Wythe Place. It is three blocks wide by three blocks deep, bounded by Robinson Road, Crescent Drive, Chesterfield Road, and Kecoughtan, however the intervening streets and blocks exhibit a slightly irregular pattern. Braddock Road follows the northeast edge of Robinson Park and both Chancellor Road and Wythe Parkway curve to intersect it. Wythe Parkway intersects just at the southeastern corner of the park at a large intersection ornamented with a grassy circle. Wythe Parkway extends to the north from this point as a divided boulevard. Individual lots in Wythe Place are again generally consistent with sizes throughout Old Wythe, although slightly smaller, averaging 50 feet by 139 feet. All of the streets and blocks throughout the two neighborhoods are bordered by sidewalks, reflective of the pedestrian-friendly theme Robinson tried to create and complemented by reserving space for Robinson Park.

Dwellings in Wythe Crescent and Wythe Place are modest and representative of the middle-class, likely military and government families, that purchased them in the late 1930s and early 1940s. One and one-and-a-half story Cape Cod Revivals, Tudor Revivals, and Minimal Traditionals make up the majority of the housing stock. Nearly all homes have attached garages.

Newport News Riverview Development

The Newport News Riverview Development is a small subdivision located centrally in Old Wythe between Wythe Crescent and Robinson Creek and is bounded generally by the water on three sides and Kecoughtan Road to the west. The land was previously part of the larger "Riverview" tract owned by the Bates and was subsequently broken up and sold to various investors throughout the late nineteenth century. The earliest plat filed for this neighborhood by the Newport News Riverview Development Company was dated 1902 and laid out the grid of streets and blocks.⁴³ Streets were 50 feet wide and named First through Fourth from Kecoughtan Road south, and Bay, Clifton, Jackson, and Hill Street from west to east.⁴⁴ The blocks were divided by central alleyways flanked by 25 feet wide and 100 feet deep lots.

For reasons unknown, the area did not experience any real development for several decades. Besides several homes built along Jackson (Piedmont), the area remained undeveloped well into the 1930s. The large wave of development for the subdivision occurred between 1938 and 1943 when nearly the entire subdivision was built out. It was supplemented by a few final homes constructed in the 1950s and a sporadic house built in the years since then. At that time, lots appear to have either been sold in pairs or already combined as 50 feet is the typical lot width throughout the neighborhood. Representative of the economy at the time these homes were constructed and the military/government employed families that likely represent the majority of original owners, dwellings throughout the neighborhood are modest. One-story bungalows, Cape Cod Revivals, Tudor Revivals, and Minimal Traditionals prevail as the bulk of the housing. In contrast to the Wythe Crescent and Wythe Place properties developed at roughly the same time, homes have a closer setback to the street from the lack of sidewalks, and most do not have attached garages.

SIGNIFICANCE: COMMUNITY PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT

Old Wythe is a cohesive historic residential neighborhood that reflects several important trends in suburban development and is a significant part of the developmental history of Hampton. As a whole, the district includes a contiguous group of historic homes and subdivisions that retain a high degree of integrity and character-defining features from the late-nineteenth through mid-twentieth centuries. As such, it reflects typical suburban development, in its developmental process, layout and configuration, as well as its homes. The district is also reflective of national and regional trends in suburban development related to the streetcar and its eventual replacement by the automobile. As such, the district illustrates the role the automobile played, coupled with the coming of the interstate system, to take development away from areas closer in to the city centers during the period of urban flight. Specific to the Hampton area, the district is directly associated with the rise of industry in nearby Newport News initiated by the coming of the C&O Railroad through the World War II industrial build-up, and is therefore representative of significant regional trends that shaped the Tidewater's economy through the present day.

As a cohesive residential neighborhood that reflects the characteristic development trends and patterns of the late-nineteenth through mid-twentieth century, the district is composed of many elements and features representative of the time. Typical of suburban development from that time period, the land that comprises the district and its separate subdivisions was originally part of large parcels of undeveloped agricultural land that were broken up and sold in smaller areas to assorted investors and speculators. These parcels were in-turn platted with typical gridded streets and blocks and subdivided into residential lots and sold individually.

Following national trends, streets in one subdivision were named after species of trees, while several of the other subdivisions utilize Indian names and terminology. The blocks themselves are divided into standard-sized suburban lots with central alleyways, many of which are still maintained. Lot sizes vary by original subdivision, although they all fall within the range of typical early-twentieth century suburban development and the houses built upon them follow similar setback, spacing, and massing patterns. These similarities in composition lend the historic district a unified and related character despite the fact that each of the subdivisions was platted at different times and with various attributes. However, the slight variations amongst subdivisions still allow the identification of each individual subdivision with its unique developmental history.

The unique and changing developmental history can also be seen through slight variations in architectural composition. As many suburban neighborhoods of the time, the historic district developed in a somewhat eclectic fashion with a mix of turn-of-the-century upper-middle class homes built by wealthy businessmen looking to escape the city and enjoy the benefit of living along the streetcar line and the shore of Hampton Roads and numerous early- to mid-twentieth century middle-class homes built in various subdivisions fueled by the automobile offering residents similar benefits at an affordable cost. Properties throughout the neighborhood reflect this trend with large and deep lots along the waterfront and flanking the former streetcar line routes, and smaller lots lining the numerous cross-streets.

The eclectic nature of the district and mixed economical background is a result of its proximity to both Hampton and Newport News. Its growth was therefore connected to both cities, and each was responsible for differing patterns of development during the early period due to contemporary economic conditions. The interconnectedness of Old Wythe with both Hampton and Newport News was amplified by the streetcar lines that ran through it and between the two municipalities in its early stages of development. The western end of the district, nearer Newport News, developed much more quickly and with a stronger presence of middle- to upper-middle class families after the streetcar opened the area up for residential development by employees from the Newport News industries. The eastern end of the district, closer to Hampton, developed slower in the early period, as Hampton's need for residential development as far out as Wythe did not yet exist because neighborhoods closer in to the city like Victoria Boulevard and Pasture Point were still growing. Instead, only a few wealthy Hampton businessmen built grand homes along the streetcar line and the shore of Hampton Roads during the first few decades of development.

While there is no doubt the early development of Old Wythe can be attributed to the streetcar lines between Hampton and Newport News, the success of the area was more a result of the rise of the automobile, as is evidenced by the increased growth in the area in the 1910s and 1920s, and by the massive development in the area after the streetcar lines ceased to operate in the 1930s. By that time, the automobile opened up the Old Wythe area to a much larger number of middle- and upper-middle class families who filled in both ends and the middle of the historic district. It was the rise of the automobile in the 1910s and 1920s, and the ability of families to conveniently live further out of the city at affordable costs, that encouraged growth in neighborhoods like Old Wythe and pulled residents from the closer-in, true streetcar neighborhoods, such as Victoria Boulevard and Pasture Point in Hampton. It was during this period that development in Old Wythe began in earnest and slowed down in the more proximal suburbs. Several of its largest subdivisions were platted during this time, and many lots in earlier developments that were still vacant were built upon at this time as well.

The importance of the automobile to the district can also be seen through the design and layout of the development. Many blocks throughout the district, including those in the earliest subdivision at the west end, were laid out with integral alleyways. In most cases, those blocks and lots without a rear alley access have original driveways. The individual properties exhibit this trend as well, as many of the properties from the 1910s and 1920s have driveways and garages indicating the importance and prevalence of the automobile as early as those decades. By the 1930s and 1940s, almost all properties constructed had a garage, signifying the almost complete reliance on the automobile by residents of the neighborhood by that time.

Ironically, it was also the automobile that played a role in the downfall of Old Wythe and neighborhoods like it in the second-half of the twentieth century, when the interstate system opened up newer, larger, and cheaper areas even further out of the city. This is the case in Hampton with Interstate 64 that allowed residents of the city and nearby Newport News to live further up the peninsula and commute to work.

SIGNIFICANCE: ARCHITECTURE

Besides reflecting significant trends and patterns of development, Old Wythe also contains a wide variety of architectural forms and styles that were prevalent during its development and represents a cohesive collection of late-nineteenth through mid-twentieth century architecture. Its building fabric reflects its growth and development from the 1880s through the present day and contains a mix of high-style architecture and vernacular interpretations of those styles. The district retains a high percentage of intact historic buildings with very little nonhistoric infill and represents one of the largest concentrations of historic residential architecture in Hampton.

Old Wythe developed over an extended period of time, and its eclectic architectural fabric is a result of economic diversity and its various development periods and influences. Patterns can be seen in the architecture related to the respective context of time and location throughout the district. This includes the large and grandiose Victorian-era homes of the upper and upper-middle class along Hampton Roads and the Chesapeake Avenue Streetcar line; the turn-of-the-century middle-class bungalows and lower-style Folk Victorian homes along the other early roads in the area; the numerous middle-class and military-family revival style homes spread throughout much of the district built in the years leading up to and during World War II; and finally the mid-century modern-movement homes that filled in the few remaining empty lots during the post-war housing boom.

Many of the oldest homes in Old Wythe, particularly along Chesapeake Avenue, were architect-designed and exhibit various high-style architectural influences. The John Simpson House, built circa 1849 at 3629 Chesapeake Avenue, demonstrates many characteristics associated with the Greek Revival style. Several large estates also along Chesapeake Avenue were built in the late nineteenth and early twentieth century along the shoreline streetcar line by wealthy businessmen, and exhibit high-style characteristics of Queen Anne, Shingle, Stick and other Victorian-era styles.

The vast majority of buildings throughout Old Wythe, however, are modest and can be classified as middle-class dwellings. While nearly all of these homes exhibit influences from a specific architectural style, most examples are a simpler, vernacular interpretation. The earliest planned development in Old Wythe took place in the western end, which developed as a middle- and upper-middle class workers neighborhood. Beginning in the 1890s, many of the older homes exhibit various interpretations of Victorian-era styles. While these homes are not as grandiose as those along Chesapeake Avenue, they still exhibit characteristic features such as steep roofs, shingled gables, and wide porches.

Exemplifying the nationwide trend, the gaudy and exuberant Victorians were replaced by simpler Craftsman forms in the early twentieth century. A wide-range of types and variations can be found throughout the neighborhood ranging from small one-story front-gabled bungalows to two-story side-gabled bungalows and American Foursquares. While embellished examples with stone columns, compound roofs, stained-glass or assorted Asian influences are not found throughout Old Wythe, the Craftsmans present do exhibit characteristic exposed rafter tails, wide front porches, battered columns, and paired/ribbon windows.

The early twentieth century introduction of colonial and eclectic revival styles is also plentifully represented. In fact, the Colonial Revival and various forms thereof is the most dominant architectural style in the district. Arguably one of the most popular and enduring styles of American architecture, it was the style of choice throughout Old Wythe and a large percentage of homes throughout the district exhibit some form of it. Because of its flexibility of elaboration and simplicity of form, Colonial Revival was extremely adaptable to a variety of tastes and budgets and lent itself well to both the high style dwellings of the wealthy and to the more modest styles of the middle class. The full range of Colonial Revival forms that are represented throughout Old Wythe clearly illustrate how the varying economic levels of the district's residents were melded together into a diverse, yet cohesive landscape. Forms employed include the Cape Cod Revival, Dutch Colonial Revival, Federal/Adamesque, and assorted simpler interpretations identified by their symmetry.

Another dominant architectural style throughout Old Wythe is the Minimal Traditional and its various forms. The Minimal Traditional became popular during the mid-century modern architectural movement and became a staple of the post-war housing boom. As such, these houses are prevalent as infill throughout the older subdivisions in the district and as original construction in the later subdivisions. The early Minimal Traditionals are typically of the one-story variant, and complement many of the older homes in the district by blending subtle influences from the Colonial Revival, Tudor Revival, and even Craftsman styles. The two-story variant became more popular for later examples of the Minimal Traditional, which also tend to incorporate more characteristics of the Colonial Revival.

Overall, the architecture of Old Wythe remains as an excellent representation of the development and history of the area. Its homes illustrate the changes in development patterns over time and tell the story of the transition from rural farmland to suburban neighborhood. Most of the buildings in the district retain a relatively high level of physical integrity and are reflective of their historic character. In addition to representing the evolution of architecture in the district as a whole, many buildings present are excellent examples of their particular architectural types and styles.

Verbal Boundary Description

The boundaries for the Old Wythe Historic District generally follow the backside of lots on the east side of Hanover Street on the east; the shoreline of Hampton Roads on the south; the east side of Pear Avenue on the west; and the backside of properties along the south side of Kecoughtan Road on the north. The southern and western boundaries are consistent while the northern and eastern boundaries are more variable. Specifically, all properties facing Kecoughtan Road are excluded from the boundary, although those resources adjacent to the road that face a cross street are included. On the eastern edge, the boundary follows the back side of lots facing LaSalle Avenue south from Kecoughtan Road until an additional row of lots along Hanover Street begins, at which point, the boundaries extend around the backside of lots on the east side of Hanover Street. It follows these lots until Hanover Street ends, at which point the boundary returns to the back side of lots along LaSalle Avenue. It follows these lots until they are intersected by the rear of lots along Chesapeake Avenue, at which point, the boundary follows them to Church Creek at the eastern end of Chesapeake Avenue. Here, the boundary follows the creek to the mouth of Hampton Roads.

The district boundaries are delineated on the accompanying map that also depicts contributing and noncontributing resources. The boundaries fall within the Hampton, Newport News South, Newport News North, and Norfolk North USGS Quadrangles.

Boundary Justification

The boundaries of the Old Wythe Historic District reflect the developmental history of the area and represent the perimeter of the contiguous historic residential neighborhood. Despite being geographically large, and composed of a mix of early estates and later planned subdivisions, the area has evolved into a cohesive and unified neighborhood. The history and development of the area has been tied to the water from the prehistoric times through the period of significance and therefore the shoreline of Hampton Roads is the logical southern boundary. Kecoughtan Road to the north has been a major connector between Newport News and Hampton and provided access to the interior of the Wythe area since it was constructed. From early in the twentieth century, it became a commercial corridor and therefore a divide between the Old Wythe area and other residential areas to the north. The eastern boundary along the backside of LaSalle Avenue and the few homes along Hanover Street have been a border of the Wythe area since 1905 when the streetcar line was constructed down it. At that time, it became an early edge of development that was further aided by Church Creek just to the east. Beyond this creek is a large area of nonhistoric properties that were not associated with the development of Old Wythe. The western boundary of the district follows Pear Avenue, which is also the border between the cities of Hampton and Newport News. The area stretching several blocks in both directions from this border was platted together as a single subdivision, although from an early point, Pear Avenue became an established boundary. Development west of this line in Newport News occurred much more rapidly and in 1916, the residents voted to incorporate as a small town called Kecoughtan. Soon after, Kecoughtan was annexed by Newport News leaving the municipal border at Pear Avenue as of 1927, where it has remained since that date.
