DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (II known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Stono is sited on a bluff, Jordan's Point, overlooking the Maury River, at the north end of the Virginia Military Institute campus in Lexington. The property is approached from the rear by a winding lane to the east. Three of its early outbuildings remain, including one which is now incorporated in the fabric of the main house.

The original portion of the house is cruciform, having a two-story central section and one-story wings and is laid in Flemish bond. The façade is dominated by a two-story Roman Doric portico with a modillioned pediment and lunette and a gallery at second-floor level. Typical of its builder's work, the columns are very thin and closely spaced. The two-story portion is three-bays wide with a leaded semi-circular fanlight over the central entry, and a similarly treated door leads to the porch above. Each of the wings is two-bays wide, and the entire house, except for the portico, is encircled by a four-course, molded-brick cornice. All of the windows have six-over-six sash with unadorned openings and rowlock heads.

Behind the large entry hall in the main block is a narrow transverse stair hall with its own exterior door, and behind this is a parlor. The east wing is given over to a library, and the west wing is the dining room.

The house was extended 60 feet to the rear (south) around 1870 by the construction of a one-and-one-half story connection to a one-story loom house in the rear. Two other rooms have been added to the rear of the west wing.

The woodwork at Stono is elegant but restrained. Flush wainscoting and a plain denticulated cornice encircle the entrance hall. The original mantel, now in the library, has robust Doric colonnettes surmounted by architrave blocks with carved vertical, elliptical sunbursts on three sides, and a bold shelf is broken around these architrave blocks. A central tablet has a larger, horizontal sunburst like those over the colonnettes. Enclosing the firebox is a cast iron surround with circular and elliptical panels, made by the house's builder, John Jordan, at his ironworks. A pair of fanlight doorways, one leading to the stair hall and the other to the outside, complete the woodwork in the entry. Both have reeded casings with corner blocks, molded keystones, and wooden mullions.

Flush wainscoting, topped by a chair rail, less elaborate than that in the hall, decorates the library. The original mantel here is now in the entrance hall. It has reeded Doric pilasters with incised elliptical sunbursts over them and in the central tablet. The library fireplace is outfitted with an iron stove made by Jordan himself. The woodwork in the dining room and parlor resembles that in the library, but with minor differences of detail such as the use of paneled rather than reeded pilasters in the parlor mantel.

The stairs with their flush dado, plain banister, rectangular balusters, and attenuated newel are enlivened by a curious detail. The banister passes over the newel and terminates in a delicately carved dog's head which is said to represent Jordan's favorite hound.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Stono with the buildings of the Virginia Military Institute forms the impressive river aspect of Lexington. Its brickwork, three-part Palladian plan, refined interior woodwork, and eccentric proportions make the house one of the most distinctive works by John Jordan, an early Lexington builder and industrialist whose architectural ideas were shaped by the architecture of Thomas Jefferson. Jordan had been employed on the 1806 remodeling of Monticello and in the later construction of the University of Virginia.

John Jordan (1777-1854) was born in Goochland County, Virginia, and later lived in Halifax County before emigrating to Lexington in 1802. He gradually built up a flourishing industrial and construction empire which included iron smelting and grist mills, a blacksmith shop, cotton and woolen textile manufacturing, and building and architectural work. For fifty years, he dominated building construction in Lexington and was responsible for nearly every important building erected there during that period. The first structure with which he was associated was Mulberry Hill, a large house erected around 1803. Shortly thereafter he worked for Jefferson at Monticello then returned to his own activities at Lexington. Little Stono (1816) was probably the first building which was entirely his own work. During the 1820s, he constructed the Balcony Falls section of the James River and Kanawha Canal and the Washington Building at what is now Washington and Lee University.

Stono, originally called Jordan's Point, was built by Jordan for his own residence in 1818. His use of the so-called three-part Palladian scheme with a colossal Roman Doric portico and the hilltop siting of the house recall Jefferson's work. In addition Jordan used a plan consisting of a central block with front and rear rooms and single-cell wings, with a deemphasized stair, reminiscent of Jefferson's early plans for Monticello.

Except for the defoliation of the site by Union gunboats during the Civil War, Stono has had an uneventful history since Jordan's time. Its present owners acquired it in 1958.
