DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

St. James Church is a one-story brick structure with a tetrastyle Greek Doric portico on the stuccoed gable end front. From the standpoint of craftsmanship the portico is well executed, but the proportions and detail are quite provincial in feeling. The entablature has no triglyphs but does contain a curiously unbroken row of guttae directly below the frieze. It is interesting that the builder ran the entablature around all three sides of the steep pediment rather than just at the bottom. Over the portico is placed a Gothic bell tower with squatty crockets at each corner and a squatty spire in the center. The sides of the building each contain four tall rectangular windows topped by rubbed brick jack arches.

The most significant feature of the church is the splendid painted architectural decoration on the interior. The painting is genuine 'trompe l'oeil', having rendered shadows and carefully worked-out false perspective. The main feature of this decoration is the reredos which consists of coupled Roman Doric pilasters supporting a plain entablature. These pilasters frame a coffered tunnel vault at the end of which is a paneled door. Painted on the shallow vaulted ceiling of the main part of the church is a false entablature, panels, and foliage to imitate decorative plaster-work. Imitation panels also appear around the walls of the church. Another notable feature on the interior is the interesting staircase at the center of the rear. The stair descends from the gallery in an unsupported flight and divides halfway into two flights.

St. James Church survives in excellent condition. It retains its original pews, and the painted decoration was carefully restored in 1929.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE (Include Personages, Dates, Events, Etc.)

St. James Church was built in 1838 from materials salvaged from an earlier eighteenth century church nearby. This may account for the early appearance of the side elevations. While the exterior of the church is interesting, the chief significance of the building lies in the fact that it has retained its nineteenth century painted architectural decoration on the interior. All that is known of this decoration is that it was done shortly after the church was built by a traveling artist named Potts. Although other churches in the United States may have had this type of ante bellum decoration, St. James is an extremely fine, if not unique example. It is interesting and indeed unusual that a church of such provincial architectural quality should contain such sophisticated and finely executed decoration. That the artist was able to work his design so successfully into the existing fabric is a testament to his skill.
