II. ABSTRACT

The survey of historic resources in the Town of Lawrenceville was from December 1997 until December 1998. The effort was a jointly funded Town of Lawrenceville and Department of Historic Resources Cost-Share Project. The three main objectives of the project were to survey approximately 550 resources at the reconnaissance level; produce a survey report that would provide historic contexts for surveyed properties; and to complete a national register Nomination for the Town of Lawrenceville Historic District.

The work was carried out by Bill Laffoon, an architect, and native of Lawrenceville, and Nat Neblett, an architect with extensive background in historic architecture. Nat also is a native of Lawrenceville, and recently retired back there just before the beginning of this project. The Lawrenceville Railroad Yard had been identified as a possible archaeological resource. Douglas McLearen, Senior Archaeologist with Cultural Resources, Inc, Williamsburg, assisted with that part of the survey and report.

The survey covered most of the incorporated limits of the town. The survey was centered around the Courthouse, downtown, and along the major roads that led through Lawrenceville to the Courthouse. The survey included the Atlantic & Danville Railway through the town and areas of the town that developed with the growth of the railroad. That portion of Saint Paul's College within the town limits, was included in the survey. The district is an irregular shape and includes 291.24 acres. There were 470 resources surveyed in the following time periods.

Time Period	Resources
Before 1880	9
1880-1930	259
1931-1949	76
1950-Present	126
Total	470

The time period before 1880 represents the early settlement period of the town, county and south side Virginia region. The time period from 1880 until 1930 represents an era of growth in the town, county and region, closely related to the Atlantic & Danville Railroad's completion across south side Virginia. Lawrenceville, by 1900, had become a railroad town with the A&D operations and shops located there. The time period 1931 until 1949 identifies the latest period to produce contributing historic resources.

III. ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The Lawrenceville Historic District Survey and National Register Nomination project was funded by the Town of Lawrenceville, and the Virginia Department of Historic Resources. Lawrenceville Town Manager and Police Chief Douglas Pond acted as the town contact. Margaret Peters, with the Department of Historic Resources, initiated the project by preparing the Preliminary Information Form. Petersburg Capitol Region Office Manager Robert Carter and Architectural Historian Jack Zehmer provided invaluable guidance throughout the course of the project.

Local authors provided extensive background and comprehensive histories that include: Adventure in Faith by James Solomon Russell Brunswick County, Virginia, 1720-1975 by Gay Neale Brunswick Story by Edith Bell and Sonny Heartwell (deceased) The Atlantic & Danville Railway Company by William Griffin The History of Saint Paul's College by Frances Thurman Volumes of the Brunswick Times-Gazette Newspaper made available by Annie Ruth Clarke, provided great detail. Sanborn Maps from the Virginia State Library and Archives provided a historical topography of the town. The staff at the Brunswick-Greensville Regional Library also provided invaluable assistance. Nat Neblett, an architect and historian, and a native of Lawrenceville, conducted in-the-field, survey work and was assisted by numerous, unnamed property owners with site specific information, leaving no stone unturned.

V. PROJECT DESCRIPTION

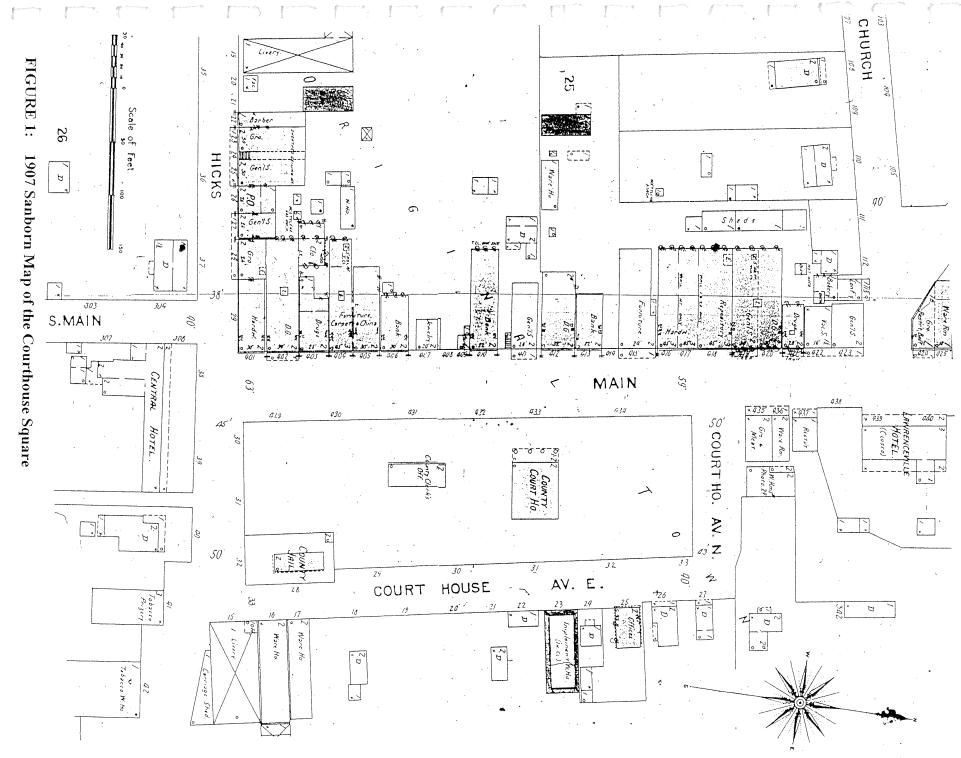

The survey of architectural resources within the corporate limits of the Town of lawrenceville was undertaken in the winter of 1998 to the spring of 1999. The purpose was to investigate and document approximately 450 to 500 architectural properties, assess archaeological resources associated with the railroad, prepare a survey report and complete a National Register Nomination Form. The project was funded as a cost-share agreement between the Town of Lawrenceville. Bill Laffoon and Nat Neblett, both architects and natives of the town provided all services related to the project, with the exception of the archaeological assessment. Douglas McLearan, archaeologist with Cultural Resources, Williamsburg, provided services for that part of the work.

Town Manager and Police Chief Douglas Pond acted as the town contact. Margaret Peters, with the Department of Historic Resources, initiated the project by preparing the Preliminary Information Form. Petersburg Capitol Region Office Manager Robert Carter and Architectural Historian Jack Zehmer provided invaluable guidance throughout the course of the project.

The project will produce:

- 1. A Survey Report, 10 bound copies (5 to DHR, 5 to Lawrenceville) 2 loose-leaf copies (1 to DHR, 1 to Lawrenceville), and 2 computer diskettes of the final survey report.
- 2. Photographic Negatives, bound and processed to DHR standards, submitted to DHR.
- 3. National Register Nomination Form with 2 sets of photographs, negatives, inventory of the proposed historic district, maps, a slide show, and general presentations meeting the project requirements.

The completed project can serve as a planning document and it will allow historic tax rehab credits to be available to qualified properties in the historic district.

U

VI HISTORIC CONTEXT

Historic Overview

Lawrenceville is located in central Southside Virginia, halfway between Danville and Norfolk in the heart of the Virginia-Carolina tobacco country. The town is sited at a crossing of colonial stage roads and an area of early European settlement that became the seat of Brunswick County in 1781. The Virginia General Assembly created the town in 1814 with a decree that twenty acres of land belonging to Peggy Williams, daughter of Philip Williams, be laid off into lots. By 1816 town status was achieved, and the name Lawrenceville was used. (Neale:124) Legend persists that the town was named for a race horse named Lawrence, as horse racing and wagering were popular at the time. Another legend is that the town was named for Captain James Lawrence, a War of 1812 hero who died after exclaiming "Don't give up the ship."

Throughout its history, the town has been a crossroads of roads and stagecoach routes carrying traffic to the courthouse and the county's tobacco crop to market. (Neale:119) Early life centered around the courthouse and the town was home to mostly artisans and craftsmen, laborers and domestic servants. Ordinaries were established to serve travelers. Phil Williams maintained an ordinary at the courthouse. In Historical Collections of Virginia, ... published in 1846, Henry Howe describes the town: "Lawrenceville, the county seat, is 73 miles west of south from Richmond. It is a neat village, presently situated on a branch of the Meherrin River and contains 2 churches and about 25 dwellings." The earliest institutional building surviving in the town is Saint Andrew's Episcopal Church (1829). The present courthouse (shown on the cover) was built in 1854 by Robert Kirkland and E. R. Turnbull, the clerk, and it continues to serve as the centerpiece of the town.

Aside from mustering of troops and forming reserves, there was little military activity in Lawrenceville during the Civil War. (Neale:175) One exception was a raid on Lawrenceville and its courthouse in 1864 by Koutz, an officer in Sheridan's troops. Edward R. Turnbull, the county clerk spread a Masonic apron over courthouse records and left before the Union troops arrival. A Union guard returned Turnbull's apron to his home. After the raiders departure, it was discovered that nothing valuable had been destroyed and county records from 1732 were still intact. Following the Civil War, Brunswick County and Lawrenceville were very poor. Sharecropping was widespread. Charles E. May (Neale:231) described Lawrenceville in 1877 as "a very small village consisting of a courthouse, a few small stores, two blacksmith shops, a shoemaker's shop and several dwellings."

The end of the War brought emancipation and with it came James Solomon Russell to Lawrenceville. Russell arrived in March 1882 after being sent as a new deacon for the nucleus of a black congregation at Saint Andrew's. (Russell:17) He immediately began his work in religion and education for the black community The school opened in Lawrenceville in 1888 and later evolved into the present Saint Paul's College. The Saul Building, a 2 story frame school house built in 1888, the oldest structure at the college still stands today.

By the turn of the century Lawrenceville began to grow and prosper.(Neale:230) New jobs were opening up. All this resulted from the coming of the railroad to the county. The Atlantic & Danville Railroad was chartered in 1882. The biggest boost to the town came with the completion of the Atlantic and Danville line, extending to Danville 1891. The terminal shops and offices were located in Lawrenceville,. By the turn of the century, Lawrenceville had become a railroad town. Open and operating until 1952, the railroad shops in Lawrenceville served as a significant boost to the economic well being of the town.

Newgass builder of the railroad, bought land in the west of Lawrenceville between Windsor Avenue and High Street. (Neale:249) He laid out streets, sectioned it into lots and developed it as a residential part of town. This development was essential for housing as eventually the railroad operation in Lawrenceville employed over 200 residents. The change in the town's population mirrors its period of greatest growth. In 1890, Lawrenceville's population was 305 residents. That number would increase to 760 in 1900 and 1,733 residents in 1910.

A corollary to the railroad activity was increased commerce in Lawrenceville. (Neale:252) Before the railroad had even recorded its first deed, P.I. Bostwick of South Carolina bought a large parcel of land along Main Street across from the courthouse. This area became the commercial area for the town, with banks, shops, and service buildings. Many of the commercial structures along Main Street date from the period 1900 to 1930. Bostick built the first brick building in Lawrenceville in 1880 (other than the courthouse and clerk's office) and it is still in use today at 233 North Main Street by Brunswick Insurance Agency.

As Lawrenceville grew so did the need for religious and educational facilities. In 1906 Lawrenceville's citizens became aroused in their civic duty and built a new high school at 405 Park Street, still standing. (Spatig:30) I. E. Spatig, a member of the County Board of Supervisors, described the school as a magnificent pile in a fine oak grove, on an eminence that would stand for generations as a monument to civic pride.

Churches kept pace during this period. A Methodist congregation had built a church facing Main Street in 1847. In 1906 it was replaced with the present church, a larger structure of brick facing Church Street. Baptist congregations had organized in the county before 1804. A Baptist Church formed in 1887 near Diamond Grove Farm voted to move to Lawrenceville. A new brick Lawrenceville Baptist Church, at 304 South Hicks Street, was dedicated in July 1901. (Neale:244) The first Presbyterian church was formed in the county in 1826. Lawrenceville Presbyterian, a frame church at 415 High Street, remains largely as it was constructed in 1898.

By 1912 Lawrenceville (Neale:253) had put through a bond issue for a water filtration plant, a gravity sewage system, sewer line, miles of cast iron pipe, and an electric generating plant with distribution and street lighting. In 1924 Lawrenceville received state and federal monies and paved the streets in the town.

Perhaps the greatest evidence of the depression in Lawrenceville was the failure of the four banks in Lawrenceville. Mergers were made in efforts to stay open. (Neale:262) The last of the four Lawrenceville banks failed in 1936. The Farmers and Merchants Bank of Brodnax had opened a branch in Lawrenceville in 1933 with Frank Newsom as president, and remained solvent throughout the depression.

During the depression, Roosevelt's programs led to curbs and gutters on all the streets, extended the paving of many streets, including the construction of a community swimming pool, bath house and an impressive baseball stadium. The baseball stadium, (Neale:254) a CWA project was dedicated in September 1934. Opening day in May 1939 found 1,800 spectators at the Lawrenceville stadium. (BTG) In 1935 a local land surveyor, Brooks Price prepared plans for the swimming pool and bath house, constructed as a WPA project and opened the 4th of July, 1936. The stadium and pool with ancillary buildings are surviving structures, still in use today.

After World War II, Lawrenceville's prosperity would wane. The automobile and associated highway building programs gave easier access to businesses across the region. Lawrenceville was "by-passed" in 1961. US Highway 58 from Norfolk, running east to west, parallel to the A&D Railroad line, across the state through Danville and Bristol, skirted around the south side of the town. Merchants complained that the town's businesses would be isolated from most through-county traffic. This isolation from the new preferred means of transportation, the automobile and new highways, would cause most of Lawrenceville's historic resources to remain intact, with development patterns relatively unchanged.

Topography and Political Organization

The site of Lawrenceville has been the seat of Brunswick County since Greensville County was split off from Brunswick in 1781. Brunswick County had been formed in 1720, bordered on the east by Surry and Isle of Wight counties, lying above the Virginia-North Carolina dividing line, south of the Nottoway River and extending westward to the Blue Ridge. As western settlement and population expanded, Brunswick would be carved into as many as twelve new counties. County seats were required to be sited as close to the center of the county as possible, which led to the 1781 courthouse relocation to Lawrenceville from a mid-18th century site.

The Meherrin River flowing southwest across Brunswick boundaries was the primary natural feature that divided the county. Although the geographical center of the county was south of the Meherrin, the courthouse and county seat were placed above the north side of the river.

The land in the county is a transition from the flat tidewater on the east to the rolling piedmont on the west. Since early settlement and through the 20^{th} century, agriculture has been the dominant industry with tobacco as the primary crop followed by cotton, grains and timber.

The Virginia General Assembly created the town in 1814 with a decree that twenty acres of land belonging to Peggy Williams, daughter of Philip Williams, be laid off into lots. (Neale:124) By 1816 town status was achieved, and the name Lawrenceville was used. The town occupies approximately one square mile of land area with the courthouse centrally located at crossroads on a hill.

Roads were the primary transportation networks, as rivers in this area of Virginia are not navigable. The Boydton-Petersburg Plank Road, running east to west across the county, above the county seat, carried agricultural products out of the south side counties to markets in Danville, Petersburg and Richmond.

The Lawyer's Road (now Windsor Avenue) led from the courthouse northward to the Boydton-Petersburg Plank Road. The Lawrenceville Stage Road (now North Main Street and Hwy 58) led from the courthouse eastward towards Belfield (later Greensville Courthouse), Smokey Ordinary and Dinwiddie Courthouse. South Main Street led southward out of town to the part of the county above the North Carolina line. Pennington Bridge Road, now West Hicks Street headed west to cross the Meherrin River and head towards Mecklenburg Courthouse at Boydton. Early development on the town occurred along roads leading to and from the courthouse. By the turn of the 20th century Lawrenceville began to grow and prosper as a result of the railroad to the county. (Neale:230) The Atlantic & Danville Railroad was chartered in 1882 and it gave the biggest boost to the town when the line was completed, extending to Danville 1891. The terminal shops and offices for the A&D were located in Lawrenceville. The railroad provided a strong connection into the 20th century tying common interests among the south side agricultural counties. The prosperity in the town and the south side region would only be hampered by the depression.

After World War II, Lawrenceville's prosperity would wane. The automobile and associated highway building programs gave easier access to businesses across the region. Lawrenceville was "by-passed" in 1961. US Highway 58 from Norfolk, running east to west, parallel to the A&D Railroad line, across the state through Danville and Bristol, skirted around the south side of the town. This isolation from the new preferred means of transportation, the automobile and new highways, would cause most of Lawrenceville's historic resources to remain intact, with development patterns relatively unchanged.

Domestic Theme

The first, predominantly English, settlers in the area built dwellings that were fairly crude and temporary in nature. Later, more permanent dwellings were simple in design with one or two rooms, above a cellar, and half story dormered room(s) over. The dormer was a feature from English building tradition that was not well suited to violent rainstorms common in Southside Virginia from the spring to fall. As settlement continued, many homes incorporated the center hall, flanked by several rooms. As families grew larger houses were built two story.

There are few early buildings in the town that are built of anything but wood. This is the dominant building material for residential buildings in the town until the formation of Lawrenceville Brick & Tile Corporation. There were earlier brickyards, Mr. Rainey's Brickyard for instance, but their masonry products were primarily for foundations and chimneys.

Domestic architecture is distinctive among three periods of the town's development. Dwellings that remain from settlement until the beginning of growth and the railroad era are typically two story, wood frame, simple design, mid 19th century vernacular and Italianate styles. These houses were generally sited facing the early roads leading to and from the courthouse. Windsor Avenue and South Main Street have the largest number of dwellings during this initial growth period.

Perhaps the oldest house in the town is at 202 South Main Street was built in 1810. The house has a brick raised basement. Its original appearance is not visible since the original one and one-half story cottage was later enlarged to two full stories with a T addition at the south end and additions at the rear. Dr. ER Turnbull was responsible for the additions and alterations.

The house at 103 South Main Street, (FIGURE 3) built 1835, is one of the oldest remaining dwelling in the town. The two story symmetrical, single pile, side gable house has 3 bays at the front and features a one story, 3 bay porch across the front of the house. The cornice is boxed with returns at the ends and the weatherboard is beaded. Chimneys are supported on stone bases. The front porch was later altered with a brick foundation and brick pedestals with wood columns supporting the porch. There is a double servants quarters at the rear of the site, wood framed, on and one-half story with a center brick chimney.

"Windsor" at 710 Windsor Avenue (FIGURE 4), another early house, was built 1875 as a summer home by Dr. WW Wilkins, who is buried on the site. William Wingfield Meredith remodelled the house in 1912 for his permanent home. The two story, Greek Revival house has a wrap around front porch with Ionic columns. The broad cornice has a fascia divided by dentil. Remaining outbuildings include a wood framed meat house on a brick foundation and a two story wood framed barn.

Houses at 302 Court Street (1870), 301 South Main Street (1875, and 703 Windsor Avenue (1875) are all frame dwellings built before 1880. Adjacent to the Courthouse Square is 320 Court Street, a two story dwelling, side gable, center hall, with additions at the rear. The Lewis Harris House at 301 South Main Street is a one story frame, T-plan over a raised brick basement, front gable with brackets and a 4 bay porch with turned posts. The Hammock House at 703 Windsor Avenue is a two story, Italianate, T-plan, with brackets at the cornice. The porch has turned posts with brackets. Compass headed windows dominate both floors at the front.

The most prolific house building came in the growth and railroad era, from 1880 until 1930. Building styles included Italianate, Colonial Revival, Late 19th-Early 20th Century American Movements, and Queen Anne. The Atlantic & Danville Railroad was chartered in 1892. That line connected Danville on the west to a deep water port at the James River on the east. An Englishman, Benjamin Newglass, builder of the railroad, purchased land west of Windsor Avenue. He laid out streets, sectioned it into lots and developed it as a residential part of town.

Windsor Avenue, reaching from Saint Andrew's Episcopal Church northwest across the town limits at Windsor developed as one of the prominent residential streets. The street was named for the substantial Greek Revival summer home, "Windsor" built by Dr. William Webb Wilkens. The houses which remain along the street date primarily from the 1880s to the 1930s, the period of Lawrenceville's greatest growth.

Several of the town's prominent merchants built houses on this street. Dossie Barkley, a merchant, cofounder of Sledge and Barkley in 1897 built the large brick dwelling at 506 Windsor in 1892 (FIGURE 5). The Queen Anne dwelling with an octagonal tower, rusticated stone sills, cresting and finials at the roof and a porte cochere on the side is one of the most elaborate homes in town.

William S. Peebles, founder of a dry goods business that has grown to regional status, occupied the two story Colonial revival house at 701 Windsor. The T-plan house has a triangular spoolwork panel at the gable ends and porch columns are fluted Doric. There is a brick double car garage at the rear fronting Belt Road, the side street forming the corner lot on Windsor Avenue.

One of the more unusual houses is located at 401 Windsor (FIGURE 6). This house, constructed by a son of the Davie family who occupied a large frame house (razed) across Church Street, was said to have been designed to be reminiscent of his wife's remembered home in her native Norway. A large one and one-half story bungalow-type built in 1910, the house is of cream colored brick with stone trim and features large fixed sash windows and a broad, sweeping roof. There are rusticated sandstone lintels and sills at openings.

Windsor Avenue also attracted bankers, professional men and insurance agents who lined the street with substantial houses rather plain in detail but exhibiting a variety of architectural styles. Houses at 601, 603 and 607 Windsor Avenue illustrate the residential development along this prominent street. The two story, Meredith House at 601 Windsor Avenue, (FIGURE 7) built in 1890, has a large wrap around porch with ionic columns and Palladian window in the front dormer over the entrance. The two story, hipped roof dwelling at 603 Windsor Avenue (FIGURE 8) has hipped dormers at the roof with a distinct "kick" at the edge of the roof to form a broad cornice. The two story hipped roof with a boxed cornice and brackets at 607 Windsor Avenue (FIGURE 9) has a wide wrap around porch with Tuscan columns.

South Main Street, from the railroad bridge to the southern corporate limits, also developed as a prominent residential street. Frequently referred to as "Turnbull Street" the street was home to many members of that family who, around the turn of the century, built several substantial houses in the neighborhood. The two-story wood-frame "Turnbull" House, built 1909, located at 508 South Main (FIGURE 10) is one which remains. There is a large two story porch with Tuscan columns that support the porch architrave.

Charles May, and insurance agent and banker occupied the house at 308 South Main Street. Built in 1890, this Stick/Eastlake Victorian style is ornate with multiple roof forms, cresting, exposed rafter ends and moulded fascia. Emory Elmore, a Clerk of the Circuit Court for thirty-five years lived at 402 South Main Street. The one and one-half story chalet style, Bungalow/Craftsman dwelling was designed by a Richmond architect and features exposed rafter ends cut in a decorative pattern and broad overhangs at gable ends supported by wooden brackets.

The houses along High and Park streets and along First, Second and Third avenues off Belt Road are primarily middle class and workingman's dwellings built after the advent of the railroad. Typically these were of wood frame construction supported on brick pier foundations and covered with hipped or gable metal roofs. Almost invariably they featured front porches large enough to accommodate family gatherings during the hotter months.

The Sylvanus Reese House at 902 1st Avenue (FIGURE 11) is a two story hipped roof, Colonial Revival dwelling with gable projections and a wrap around porch with Tuscan columns. The house was built in 1910. Mr. Reese worked for the railroad.

Six houses aligned along the south side of Third Avenue west of Park Street constitute the most intact group of "railroad houses". Although the corner house has been remodeled beyond recognition, the other five retain much of their original character on the street side. This area of town was developed by the Lawrenceville Improvement Company.

Workingman's houses are found also along Fifth Avenue west of South Hicks and along Walnut and West Fourth Avenue, in an area known as "Newtown". The proximity to the railroad shops suggests that a large percentage of the residents found employment there.

Residential building continued on a limited scale after the 1880-1930 growth and railroad era. Brick became a more popular as a building material and a wider variety of styles of houses were seen.

Three members of the WS Peebles & Company family built houses in the South Main Street neighborhood in the 1930-40's. Marion W. Peebles, built 110 East Fifth Avenue in 1934. The two story brick, Colonial Revival dwelling was designed by Ballou & Justice, Architects, Richmond. William S. Peebles, Jr., who razed an older Turnbull house to construct "Sunnyside" (FIGURE 12) at 514 South Main Street in 1941. The large two story brick Colonial Revival dwelling featured a five bay portico across the front, two stories high, capped with Chippendale style railings. C. Wesley Peebles also built "Holly Hill" in this period. It is a large Colonial Revival brick dwelling set back across the corporate limits although the entrance gate is located at 600 Turnbull Street.

On Church Street in the Windsor Avenue neighborhood are two houses built in the mid 1930 by two of Lawrenceville's prominent professional men. The Vaden residence at 502 Church Street, built by a physician, Dr. J Bolling Vaiden, is in the Tudor revival style. Built in 1937, this two story brick, high style house has brick moulding trim at windows and doors and hoods over second floor windows. Albertis S. Harrison, Jr., attorney and governor, built his Colonial Revival house in 1936, next door at 504 Church Street. Harrison's house is two story brick with jack arches and rowlock sills at the windows. The entrance door features sidelites and a fan lite transom above the door. These houses, both built by Fred Hyde, Lawrenceville's leading contractor at the time, remain little changed by subsequent alterations.

The McDonald House at 301 Davie Street is a two story, American 4-Square brick dwelling with a pyramid roof built in 1934. A one and one-half story, brick Cotswold cottage, with a front shouldered chimney, was built next door at 305 Davie Street in 1936. The Harry T. Fleshood House at 307 Davie Street is a one and one-half story frame Mt. Vernon style cottage built in 1939.

The Poindexter House at 410 Thomas Street is a one story brick, Normandy style cottage with complicated roof lines and a round turret entry that was built in 1938. The Perkinson House at 502 Thomas Street is a two story, stone, Dutch Colonial adaptation with shed dormers and a semicircular arch over the entry door.

In the past fifty years non contributing residential building has occurred as infill in the older residential neighborhoods.

Commerce Theme

The first commercial enterprises in Lawrenceville developed to serve traffic coming to the courthouse. In 1784 the first courthouse was erected at Lawrenceville. As early as 1799, Trotter and Quarles, merchants, served as a mailing address for people living nearby with a definite mailing address. (Neale:124) Phil Williams maintained an ordinary at the courthouse. In 1837 a duel occurred between Daniel Dugger, owner of the Dugger Hotel in Lawrenceville and George Dromgoole. (Neale:128) The duel came after a night of dancing at the Masonic Hall, across the street from the north side of the courthouse square. In the middle 1800's the general store in town was Seward and Neblett's Emporium. Lynch and Wesson operated a blacksmith shop making iron goods for most anyone. No doubt, the early commercial structures were of wood construction. No commercial structures in the town remain before the growth and railroad era that began in 1880.

What remains today of the development of the commercial part of downtown began with the railroad activity that increased commerce in Lawrenceville. P.I. Bostick of South Carolina bough a large parcel of land along Main Street, across from the courthouse, even before the railroad recorded its first deed.

Bostick built the first brick building in Lawrenceville in 1880 (other than the courthouse and clerk's office) and it is still in use today at 233 North Main Street (FIGURE 13) by Brunswick Insurance Agency. Sledge and Barkley, 307 North Main Street, built the second brick building nearby. Change and growth were evident in the town by 1910. Buildings had sprung up the length of Main Street and had spread west down Hicks Street. Where Perry's Clothing is today at 321 North Main Street, a black man had a widely patronized meat market. Next to the meat market was Heather & Prince Drug Store, then Osborne & Son, Groceries next to Sledge & Barkley. Thomas Hardware began at the current Peebles location, then moved across the street to the present Helig-Myers building in 1911 and Peebles Dry Goods moved into the corner of Main and Hicks. In 1910 the sidewalks were still wooden. The Thomas Hardware-Furniture building was the first building with electric lights in Lawrenceville.

The west side of Main Street directly across from Courthouse Square is devoted exclusively to commercial and office use and has evolved as the center of the business district. Commercial buildings turn the corner at Hicks Street and occupy both sides of Hicks west to Sharp Street.

The major portion of the present building stock in the "downtown" areas of Main and Hicks results from the economic stimulus of the railroad. These buildings, contiguous along both streets and from one to three stories high, date primarily from the last decade of the nineteenth and the first three decades of the twentieth centuries. No residences, churches, schools, or other such usages interrupt this wall of commerce.

Two limestone structures intended for occupancy by banks stand out in design quality. One built for Brunswick Bank and Trust Company in 1924 at 219 North Main Street, is two story with Corinthian pilasters and a fully developed entablature. The other for Brunswick County State Bank, built in 1922 at 132 West Hicks Street (FIGURE 14) is a two story, Italian Renaissance with Doric pilasters on the exterior faces. Both buildings remain reasonably intact but have been converted to accommodate other uses.

The oldest building retaining its original name and site is the Sledge and Barkley Company (FIGURE 15) at 307 North Main Street. The company was established in 1896, then a two story brick store building with stone trim. Business success resulted in expansion over the entire building. A third story was added, and a similar building erected adjacent to the north, and a brick warehouse was added to the rear. The three story, double commercial building has modern storefront at the street level with compass head windows in the upper floors. There are recessed panels in the brick below the sheet metal cornice with brackets at the roof.

The WS Peebles Co. (now Peebles) grew to occupy several adjacent buildings of varying sizes and heights at the northwest corner of Main and Hicks streets that include 203, 205 and 207 North main Street. Immediately prior to World War II the facades along both streets at 203 North Main Street were unified by application of a moderne front of brick and peach-colored carrara glass featuring a rounded corner punctuated by small display windows. Although the glass and display windows were removed in a recent remodeling, the general moderne effect remains. The three story commercial building, built 1885, at 207 North Main Street (FIGURE 16) is one of the most architecturally interesting commercial buildings in town. Above the modern storefront red and cream polychrome brick patterns frame the windows and there is an elaborate sheet metal cornice at the roof.

Wilkerson & Clarke operated a competing dry goods store at 209 North Main Street. This 2 story brick commercial building, built 1890, has a modern recessed storefront at the street level with three recessed window bays at the upper floor.

The Helig Myers building at 110 East Hicks Street (FIGURE 17), formerly Thomas Hardware, is an imposing two story commercial building was built in 1915. Although the first floor has been altered, the façade above retains the decorative brickwork patterns which detail the windows, parapet and cornice. Next door on the corner of east Hicks and North Main streets, 102 East Hicks Street is a three story brick building, built in 1910 and was occupied for a long period by a drug store with offices and apartment over. Lawrenceville's first lending library, organized by the Woman's Club, occupied rooms in the rear of this building.

The two story brick, double storefront building at 115 West Hicks Street is a plain commercial building built in 1910. Formerly "Palm Garden," a popular meeting place with an elaborate marble soda fountain, was located on the second floor, accessible by a center stair, now removed, with a door on West Hicks Street.

At 135 West Hicks Street is the Brunswick-Greenville Library. The front of 2 story brick garment factory was faced with plaster during remodeling for corporate offices for the WS Peebles Company. After Peebles moved their headquarters to South Hill the building was given to the County Library and remodelled for that use.

Elam & Elmore operated a general merchandise store at 102 West Hicks Street. The three story brick commercial building of plain detail has pilasters on the north face with saw tooth bands above the third floor windows and a glazed tile parapet at the roof. The building was built in 1915.

Larry's Lunch operated an eatery and pool hall at 118 West Hicks Street. The two story, five bay commercial brick building, built 1913, has a modern facing at the street level with decorative bands of projecting brickwork suggesting dentils and modillions at the upper front. Larry's Lunch was a gathering spot for the Lawrenceville baseball crowd in the 1930's and 40's.

Almost all the older commercial buildings on Main and Hicks streets have been remodeled on the first floor to reflect changing occupancy and fashion. Most remain intact above the storefront. Today few of the upper floors are occupied.

Government/Law/Politics

The third courthouse site for Brunswick County was designated in 1781 and a courthouse completed there in 1783 on the north edge of what has developed as "Courthouse Square". This block, delineated by Main, Hicks, Court and Bank Streets has been the site of all subsequent major county government buildings except for the Sheriff's Office and Jail built on a neighboring site across Hicks Street.

In 1854-55 the Doric tetrastyle temple-form two-story courthouse building with offices on the first floor and courtroom o the second, was constructed just to the south of the eighteenth century courthouse. The earlier wood-frame building, described as "a very handsome building" (Neale:123) was then razed. Additions to the rear (east) were made to the 1854 courthouse in 1939 and 1973. See (FIGURE 1) on the cover

A brick jail was constructed won the south east corner of the square adjacent Hicks and Court Streets. This plain two-story building served the needs of the county until the new Sheriff's and Jail was constructed. The old jail building has been razed.

The Clerk's Office Building was constructed in 1893 between the jail and the courthouse. This twostory brick building with flat stone lintels over the first floor paired windows and semi-circular brick arches over those on second floor features a brick pediment set flush with the west wall above the entrance. Decorative treatment of stone and brick lend a Richardson Romanesque feeling to this otherwise plain rectangular plan, hipped roof building. Additions to the rear (east) of the Clerk's Office were made in 1924, 1939 and 1974.

The north end of the square was embellished with a Civil War memorial in 1911. The statue of the Confederate soldier faces west on a granite base. The memorial is enclosed within a cast iron picket fence, the remnants of one which formerly enclosed the entire courthouse square.

In 1940 Ambassador David KE Bruce donated funds anonymously to construct a library building on the northeast corner of the square, east of the Confederate memorial and about where the eighteenth century courthouse stood. Library functions were moved to a remodeled facility on Hicks Street in 1986 and the courthouse square library was then put to use as a local-history museum under the auspices of the Brunswick County Historical Society.

The Albertis S. Harrison Jr. Courthouse, constructed in 1998 and dedicated 18 April 1999, contains separate facilities for the Circuit Court, the General District Court and the Juvenile and Domestic Relations Court. It was built at the south end of Courthouse Square covering the site of the old jail. It is a three story brick building classical in detail intended to harmonize with the other government buildings.

In 1974 the Brunswick County Courthouse square nomination was accepted for inclusion in the National Register of Historic Places in the areas of significance of architecture and county history. Mention is made of the courthouse, clerk's office, library, jail and Confederate war monument.

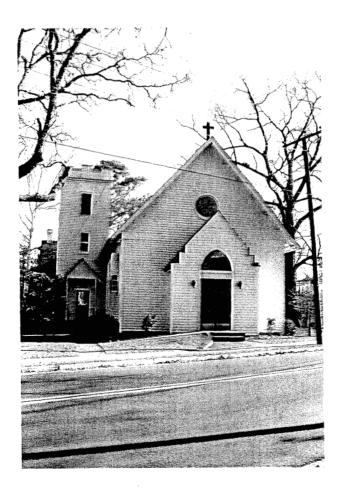

The Lawrenceville Post Office has occupied several buildings remaining in the proposed historic district always as a rental tenant. The 1907 Sanborn map shows the Post Office located in a building on the north side of Hicks Street now occupied by a barber shop and Phil's Jewelry, 113 West Hicks Street. By 1920 the Post Office had moved to the south side of Hicks Street to the building now occupied by Pino's Pizza, 118 West Hicks Street. The 1938 Sanborn map shows the location back on the north side of North Hicks in a one story building which now houses part of the Brunswick County Library, 113 West Hicks Street. The eastern section of the store building on New Hicks Street now occupied by the Star Value Grocery 1958 served as the Post Office for a period until the present building was constructed at 409 South Hicks Street.

Religion

St. Andrew's officially became the Parish of Brunswick County in 1720 though neither became functional prior to 1732. Both county and parish covered a wide geographic area far beyond the present boundaries of Brunswick County. From time to time in the eighteenth century churches and chapels were constructed at various locations within the parish, not any of which remain extant. Geronwy Owen, poet laureate of Wales was appointed rector of the parish in 1761 and a monument to his honor was erected on the grounds of St. Andrews Church in 1958.

The present St. Andrew's Episcopal Church was constructed in 1829 and continues as the oldest house of worship in Lawrenceville. Located at the southern end of Windsor Avenue at Church Street, it is no doubt one of the two churches mentioned by Henry Howe in his description published in 1846. The frame building with steep gable roof is oriented and has large lancet windows along north and south side walls now embellished with memorial stained glass. Although extensively remodeled and added to over the years, it retains validity for its construction date.

Brunswick County proved to be one of the fertile seed grounds for Methodism. A circuit was established there in 1774 which attracted Francis Asbury the following year. The first Virginia conference, May 1785, was held at Mason's Chapel in south Brunswick with Bishop Asbury presiding. Richard H. Sharp gave land on Church Street in 1847 for construction of the Lawrenceville Methodist Church. The original building was replaced by the present brick sanctuary in 1906 (FIGURE 19). The building has been enlarged in subsequent alterations but retains its Tudor Gothic attributes on its prominent site.

James Solomon Russell, founder of St. Paul's College, was sent to Lawrenceville in 1882 as a newly ordained Episcopal deacon. Upon arrival to attend to the spiritual needs of African Americans in the area he found "no church building and but a score of communicants; race prejudice seemed rampant and public opinion indifferent, if not actually hostile...." By 1883 the first St. Paul's Chapel had been constructed and was ready for occupancy. In 1904, needing larger facilities, the students erected the present St. Paul's Memorial Chapel, as the first brick masonry building on the campus. The building, gothic in character and detail, continues in service as a parish church for an active congregation and as a chapel for St. Paul's College students.

Presbyterians constructed the (FIGURE 20) Lawrenceville Presbyterian Church in 1898. This simple frame building located on the southwest corner lot at the intersection of High Street and Second Avenue remains much as constructed. A prefabricated military surplus structure containing two apartments was erected in 1946 west of the original building. Facing on Second Avenue, this building furnished living quarters for the pastor until it was joined to the older building and converted to Sunday School classrooms and a fellowship hall in the mid 1950's.

A group of Baptists organized in Lawrenceville late in the nineteenth century and appointed a committee in 1898 to undertake provision of a building. Construction began in 1899 and was completed in 1901 at 304 S. Hicks Street. (FIGURE 21) This building, located on South Hicks Street, has been extensively remodeled and enlarged over the years.

At 311 Sixth Avenue in the heart of the traditionally black neighborhood known as "Mosquito" there is a frame building now occupied by the Rising Zion congregation. Built early in the twentieth century, this structure (FIGURE 22) has served several congregations over the years. Except for a tower in the southwest corner and an addition to the rear (north), it remains much as it was constructed.

Several houses of worship previously located within the proposed historic district have been razed. The congregations of St. James Methodist Episcopal Church formerly located on Plank Road across from St. Paul's campus and First Baptist Church on East Hicks Street both built new sanctuaries in Mayfield. The abandoned buildings have disappeared without trace.

Two congregations meet in non-contributing buildings located within the proposed historic district. The building on West Fifth Avenue at South Park Street occupied by the New Hope Assembly of God congregation is not of sufficient age to be included. The Christian congregation meets in a store-front building at 406 New Street adjacent the railroad tracks.

Transportation Theme

Throughout its history, the town has been a crossroads of roads and stagecoach routes carrying traffic to the courthouse and the county's tobacco crop to market. Early life centered around the courthouse and the town was home to mostly artisans and craftsmen, laborers and domestic servants. Ordinaries were established to serve travelers. The transportation theme of crossroads at the courthouse continues today.

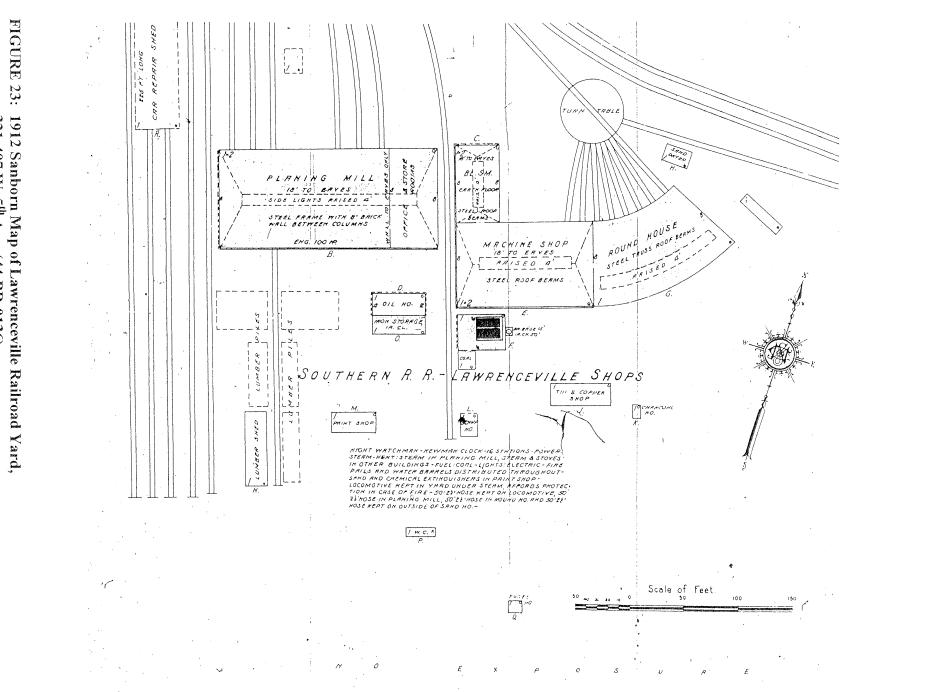

In the early settlement period, these roads were the primary transportation networks, as rivers in this area of Virginia are not navigable. The Boydton-Petersburg Plank Road, running east to west across the county, above the county seat, carried agricultural products through the south side counties to markets in Danville, Petersburg and Richmond.

The Lawyer's Road (now Windsor Avenue) led from the courthouse northward to the Boydton Plank Road. The Lawrenceville Stage Road, also known as Plank Road (now North Main Street and Hwy 58) led from the courthouse eastward across Roses Creek, towards Smokey Ordinary and Belfield (later Greensville Courthouse) and towards Dinwiddie Courthouse. South Main Street led southward out of town to the part of the county above the North Carolina line. South Hicks Street, earlier known as Pennington Bridge Road (Pennington's Bridge provided a crossing at the Meherrin River west of town) headed west towards Brodnax, and then towards Mecklenburg Courthouse at Boydton. Early development of the town occurred along roads leading to and from the courthouse.

By the turn of the century Lawrenceville began to grow and prosper. (Neale:249) New jobs were opening up. All this resulted from the coming of the railroad to the county. The Atlantic & Danville Railroad was chartered in 1882. The biggest boost to the town came with the completion of the Atlantic and Danville line, extending to Danville 1891. The terminal shops and offices were located in Lawrenceville,. By the turn of the century, Lawrenceville had become a railroad town. Open and operating until 1952, the railroad shops in Lawrenceville (FIGURE 23)served as a significant boost to the economic well being of the town.

Soon after the railroad was in operation at the turn of the century, a gleaming red roadster arrived in Lawrenceville on a railroad flat car. Dr. W H Lewis had purchased the first automobile in the town. A large group of townspeople had gathered at the railroad siding. Dr. Lewis, not knowing how to drive, found the instruction manual, got into the car, and amid cheers from the townspeople, drove it down the ramp on to his home on Windsor Avenue. The train and car were both powerful symbols of the era. While the railroad would bring growth and prosperity to the town early, and the automobile, in the future, would unknowingly reverse the effect.

The popularity of the automobile during this period is evidenced by the number of garages built at homes in the town. There is a two car, brick garage, built in 1926, behind the Lashley House at 708 Windsor Avenue. The William Peebles House, on a corner lot at 701 Windsor Avenue has a two car, brick garage, built 1923, behind, with the garage fronting Belt Road. A wood garage built in 1923 is found behind the house at 610 Windsor Avenue. There is a one and one-half story, wood framed garage behind the Turnbull House at 508 South Main Street. The 1920 Sanborn map of Lawrenceville shows an auto repair garage (40 car capacity) with underground gasoline tank on North Main Street, at the location of the present Town Fire Department. By 1926 a gasoline station (now gone) had been built near the corner of Pennington Bridge Road (South Hicks Street) and 6th Avenue.

After World War II, Lawrenceville's prosperity would wane. The automobile and associated highway building programs gave easier access to businesses across the region. Two wooded railroad overpass bridges crossed the A&D line, one at South Main Street and the other at South Hicks Street. In 1958 those wooden structures were replaced with modern VDOT concrete bridges, complete with sidewalks and railings.

Lawrenceville was "by-passed" in 1961. US Highway 58 from Norfolk, running east to west, parallel to the A&D Railroad line, across the state through Danville and Bristol, skirted around the south side of the town. Merchants complained that the town's businesses would be isolated from most through-county traffic. This isolation from the new preferred means of transportation, the automobile and new highways, would cause most of Lawrenceville's historic resources to remain intact, with development patterns relatively unchanged.

Education Theme

Education was entirely a private matter until the 1870 Underwood Constitution mandated that Virginia establish free public schools. The Public School System of Brunswick County was established in 1871. Saint Andrew's Church School operated from 1872 to 1875. Miss Lizzie Mallory's school operated from 1892 to 1896 in Lawrenceville. A Lawrenceville High School existing from 1885 to 1895 with two teachers.

By the turn of the century the idea of a free education had become well established. In 1906 Lawrenceville High School (FIGURE 24) was constructed on a full block in a residential area at 405 Park Street. The two story brick, Second Empire school has slate on the mansard roof. There are segmental arches of cream colored brick over openings and rusticated stone sills. The Trustees and Building Committee included Dr. ER Turnbull, Chairman, Dr. Chas. L. Palmer, JE Spatig, Clerk and WB Valentine, School Superintendent. Burwell Riddick of Suffolk was the contractor.

In the 1920's a second school was built, to the north, on the site and used as a high school, with the 1906 school remained in use for elementary instruction. The 1920's school has since been razed. The 1906 school building has been out of use since new elementary schools were built in the county. Totaro Elementary School and JS Russell Junior High School operate north of town. Brunswick County High School operates east of town.

James Solomon Russell arrived Lawrenceville in 1882 to begin work in religion and education for the black community. Russell was born a slave in the Palmer Springs area of Mecklenburg County in 1857. After the War, Russell had attended a neighborhood school, studied at Hampton Institute and then attended Seminary in Petersburg. After seminary and ordination Russell was sent to Lawrenceville to form the nucleus of a black congregation at Saint Andrew's Church. Russell was determined to build a parish school in Lawrenceville. The school opened in 1888 and later evolved into the present Saint Paul's College.

The site of Saint Paul's College is on a hill, on the north side of Church Street, facing the town commercial area and courthouse. Russell slowly acquired land to expand the school's campus, purchasing the Rose Creek Plantation, once owned by John Heartwell Cocke.

James Saul of Philadelphia contributed funds for construction of a frame school building, still standing, known as the Saul Building (FIGURE 25). The two story wood frame building at 111 College Drive, built in 1883 with student labor, is considered the founding building at Saint Paul's College and it is listed on the National Register of Historic Places. Now carefully preserved it serves as a museum.

In 1893 the school was incorporated. Education emphasized training for trades. Although the Washington-Du Bois controversy did not surface until 1903, Russell added an academic department in the 1890-91 school session.

The Principal's Residence at 105 College Drive, built in 1900, now provides office space for the Fine Arts Department (FIGURE 26). The two story irregular plan Queen Anne has a complex design that includes a hexagonal tower over the entry door with an arched window in the tower. Spoolwork with scroll decoration is set in the gable ends. The building has great architectural pretension and is listed on the National Register of Historic Places.

Up until the construction of the (FIGURE 27) Memorial Chapel, all of the college buildings were of wood construction. In 1904, Saint Paul's students completed all of the construction, including making the bricks, of the Memorial Chapel at 109 College Drive. The chapel is a large red brick, Gothic Revival structure with a slate roof having two bands of fish scale decoration. Paired gothic windows are spaced between the brick buttresses. There is a large square bell tower at the southeast corner with a circular tower at the corner. Granite sills and rusticated limestone bands below the windows and at buttress caps. The building is listed on the National Register of Historic Places and continues to serve as a parish church and student chapel. In the early years of the college, Saint Paul's buildings would be built totally, or partially by its students.

By the turn of the century Lawrenceville began to grow and prosper. New jobs were opening up. All this resulted from the coming of the railroads to the county. Saint Paul's students provided man power and skills learned at the school for building expansion that came with the growth of the town. James Solomon Russell, in his book, Adventure in Faith reviewed an article from the Richmond Times-Dispatch reading, "Because they will work at any honest job, the students of Saint Paul's have the good will of Lawrenceville. Nowhere is there better understanding between the races. For nine years, Saint Paul's students did all the wiring in Lawrenceville and furnished the ice and electric current to the town."

The Loulie Taylor Letcher Memorial Hospital, built in 1922, was constructed to serve the health needs of the campus. The two story brick building with a parapet and flat roof has a wood entablature surrounding the building and porches on three sides.

The Chicago Building at 24 College Drive and Emery Hall at 134 College Drive were both built in 1928. The Chicago Building is a one story brick rectangular plan building with a raised monitor in the center, providing light to interior spaces. The parapet has a broken sight line with diamond cast stone element embedded in the brick masonry. Originally built as a practice grammar school for Saint Paul's Normal School, it is now used for offices and performing arts. Julia C. Emery Hall at 134 College Drive is three and one-half floor brick dormitory over a raised basement. The building is Colonial Revival style with full pediments at gable ends and a centered pavilion on the east front and west rear. Originally built as a women's dormitory, it now serves as a men's dormitory.

In 1932 the William H. Scott Memorial Building (FIGURE 28) was constructed at 115 College Drive. The two story brick Colonial Revival building has a hipped roof with a classical cornice. First floor windows on the east and west front are enclosed in recessed arches with cast stone keystones and impost blocks that create a high style building containing architectural interest.

Anna Ramsdell Johnston Memorial Hall was constructed in 1933 at 121 College Drive. The two story brick Colonial Revival building over a full basement has a flat roof with a cast stone parapet with a large dentil band and embossed decorative swag motif. The building is a significant classroom building of competent design, built as a home economics classroom, now used for office space.

The small cottage at 136 College Drive was built in 1935. The one story frame cottage has side gables with clipped ends. The shingle style cottage is served as a faculty residence.

Since World War II the institution has attained college status and facilities have been greatly enlarged through the construction of new buildings. Buildings include the Russell Memorial Library, Science Building, dormitories, a dining hall, a gymnasium and faculty residences.

Recreation Theme

The name of the town, Lawrenceville, is connected to one of the earliest recreational activities in the area. The Red Oak Race Ground, 1751, was the first race track for horses in the county. Later tracks were built at Diamond Grove, Lawrenceville and Charlie Hope. English horses were imported into the county by 1760. Many in the county involved themselves in horse breeding and racing. (Neale:142-46) By 1830 there were horse races twice a year, lasting four days with parties, fox hounts and excursions. The great horse Sir Archie, stood at stud at Ralph Wormeley's Brunswick estate for a short time. William Kirby owned much property in the Lawrenceville area; he built a race track in the late 18th century, and owned a horse named Lawrence. Legend is that the town was named for Kirby's horse. Racing reached its peak after 1840.

The economy of (Neale:148) of the county between 1815 and 1845 was booming, making leisure available and luxury enjoyable. Social enjoyment was not limited to the wealthier people; the county, after all, had no real striated aristocracy. Weddings, funerals, christening parties and family gatherings provided the means for people to come together.

The courthouse square was the site of the most frequent social discourse in the county and town up until the early 20th century. Whenever (Neale:123) court day was held, there was lively business going on. The Masonic Hall, just to the north of the courthouse square, now gone, was a noted place for men's activities.

The Church, was and still is a religious and social focus for the community. Churches of all denominations had been established across the county. By the turn of the century, with railroad and growth in Lawrenceville, churches expanded or relocated in town. Religious services, Sunday Schools, Bible study groups, church socials and suppers all became routine for town residents.

During the depression, Roosevelt's programs were used for public improvements. Projects included curbs and gutters on all the streets, extended paving of many streets, including and the construction of a community swimming pool, bath house and an impressive baseball stadium.

The baseball stadium, (FIGURE 29) a CWA project was dedicated in September 1934 and the local papers reported that Frank Newsom and Robert Pecht were forming a Lawrenceville baseball club. By 1935 the Lawrenceville Green Sox, relying on local talent, would begin play as a minor league independent team. Competition was mainly from the Virginia League, local clubs and Carolina teams. Lawrenceville refused to join a league as games were scheduled on Saturday and Sunday. The town's businesses closed Wednesday afternoons with all day Saturday devoted to brisk business. By 1939, Larry Williams reorganized the Lawrenceville "Greenies" joining the Southside Virginia League. The team featured "ringers" from college baseball teams in search of a path to the major leagues. Contracts were signed with players. Opening day in May 1939 found 1,800 spectators at the Lawrenceville stadium. (BTG)

Following WWII, in 1948 the Lawrenceville club would be reorganized as a farm team of the St. Louis Cardinals organization for two seasons play in the Virginia League. Branch Rickey, often referred to as baseball's greatest revolutionary is credited with creating baseball's farm system as president and general manager of the St. Louis Cardinals in 1917. When Rickey took over, the Cardinals were a weak team with little cash. Rather than buy stars, Rickey decided to grow his own. Through his farm system, Rickey amassed 800 players under contract on 32 teams, keeping St. Louis atop the standings most every year, with four world-series championships, from 1919 until 1942. (Ward & Burns:127,179)

The Lawrenceville Cardinals completed the 1948 season at the bottom of the Virginia League standings with a record of 39 wins, 98 losses. The team name was changed to the Robins, possibly to more closely portray the style of the club. In the final 1949 season the Lawrenceville Robins were once again at the bottom of the standings with an improved record of 45 wins, 76 losses. Walter "Sonny" Wholey had joined the team as a manager in 1949. (Johnson & Wolff:387) Wholey remained in Lawrenceville as an educator and youth sports coach. The Lawrenceville baseball stadium and field has been named in his honor.

In 1935 a local land surveyor, Brooks Price prepared plans for the swimming pool and bath house, constructed as a WPA project and opened the 4th of July, 1936. Construction of the pool seems to have been supervised by most everyone in the Town, and commonly referred to as the "pond." There were claims of a 300,000 gallon pool, including diving boards, with a filter system providing "purified water" constantly recirculated.

The stadium and pool with ancillary buildings are rare surviving structures, still in use today although the pool's original filter system is not in operation.

ÅREK-SÅ

The Brunswick County and central Southside Virginia is primarily agriculture in nature. This theme relates for food, consumable products like tobacco, and renewable products like timber and pulp. While the county produced the major agricultural products for market, Lawrenceville provide services to support farmers and growers. The town was also the market, or transfer point for exports. Limited agricultural buildings survive.

The courthouse was a focal point for tobacco in the earliest periods of settlement. Taxes or levies from the court were sometimes paid for with tobacco. Tobacco and cotton continued as valuable crop. Even before growth and the railroad period (1880-1930) tobacco warehouses could be found in the town. Liveries were common on Hicks Street and around the courthouse. In 1912, GH Rainey operated tobacco warehouses and a cotton gin, across the street from the southeast corner of the courthouse square. By 1920 Banner Tobacco, Co-operating Tobacco, and Farmer's Tobacco all were operating warehouses, east across the street, from the courthouse square. Those warehouses survived until the 1960's and 1970's, with some moving out of the town. The New Planters Warehouse at 305 West 5th Avenue, built in 1975, is the only tobacco warehouse in the town today.

Timber is one of the most prolific products in the county. The railroads through the county had scattered sidings as a transfer point for the product. The A&D railroad yard at Lawrenceville provided a convenient spot for transfer of wood products. Union Camp presently maintains a small non-contributing, office with scales adjacent to the railroad yard at 319 West 5th Avenue.

The railroad yard and shops that came at the turn of the century went out of use in the early 1950's. Southern States at 409 West 5th Avenue, a regional business catering to agriculture has taken control of most of the railroad yard, and an old railroad car repair shed built in 1910. The car repair shed has been converted to warehouse and storage use. Additional warehouses and storage building have been recently constructed to accommodate fertilizers, products and equipment serving the agricultural community.

During the early settlement period, growth and railroad era, and up until the present, self-sufficiency remains a characteristic of people in this rural area. This remains true today, even with our access and reliance on a variety of goods and services. With the number of vegetable gardens in the town today, it is hard to imagine few dwellings in the past without a vegetable garden. Windsor, at 710 Windsor Avenue has a square frame meat house (FIGURE 30), and a two story wood framed barn that survive the turn of the century. The James Elmore House at 105 South Main Street has a wood framed barn, dating from 1925, behind the house.

Industry Theme

Throughout its history, the town has been a crossroads of roads and stagecoach routes carrying traffic to the courthouse and the county's tobacco crop to market. Early life centered around the courthouse and the town was home to mostly artisans and craftsmen, laborers and domestic servants. Ordinaries were established to serve travelers. Agriculture was the dominant activity in the county during the early settlement period. The only activity resembling industry was blacksmithing. In the mid 1880's smiths Lynch and Wesson made almost anything iron, for anybody.

Industry that developed in the town during the growth and railroad era remained related to agriculture. Tobacco and cotton remained the primary money crops. Warehouses for tobacco and gins to process cotton were scattered around the courthouse and town. In 1907, SH Raney operated tobacco warehousing and cotton gin operations, across from the southeast corner of the courthouse square. In 1920, there were no less that four tobacco warehouse operations on the east side of the courthouse square. In 1926, Temple & Palmer operated a cotton gin east of the courthouse.

The A&D Railroad shops and operations created its own industry. Lawrenceville, at the mid point on the A&D line, had a turntable, round house and machine shop. The railroad yard included planing mill, tin and copper shop, paint shop and car repair shed. In 1912, JF Lucy operated a roller mill on the north side of the railroad yard at Park Street, serving corn growers. In the same area, by 1920 RT Hudson operated a lumber planing mill, with a flour mill and ice plant in operation next to the planing mill. Peebles & Purdy Co. and Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. operated fertilizer warehouses, along the railroad at South Street.

In 1926, he Lawrenceville Brickyard operated west of town, with its own private railroad running from clay pits to the brickyard. The railroad was powered by a mule. Brunswick Seating, a chair manufacturer was in business on the south side of the railroad line near the brickyard.

Today industrial activity is limited in the town. Lawrenceville Brick & Tile has relocated east of town and expanded. Brunswick Ice & Coal Company continues with a beverage distribution, ice making and water purification plant along the north side of the railroad line at Park Street. Lawrenceville Machine Shop provides steel fabrication services on West 5th Avenue across from the railroad yard.

Health Care/Medicine

The first and only hospital facility established in Lawrenceville is the Loulie Taylor Letcher Memorial Hospital built on the St. Paul's campus in 1926. Its primary purpose was to provide medical facilities for the staff and students.

Town residents had their health care needs met by family physicians either in the doctor's office or by house calls. More serious conditions required a hospital visit in a neighboring community.

In the 1890's Dr. E. R. Turnbull remodeled the early nineteenth century residence at 202 South Main Street to serve as his residence and office. The basement office was accessible thorough a door under the front porch. The door retains a sign "OFFICE".

Two physicians built a clinic building at 319 Church Street immediately following World War II. This building continues to be operated by two physicians and to serve the primary health care needs of a number of local residents.

VII RESEARCH DESIGN

The survey of historic resources in the Town of Lawrenceville was from December 1997 until December 1998. The effort was a jointly funded Town of Lawrenceville and Department of Historic Resources Cost-Share Project. The three main objectives of the project were to survey approximately 550 resources at the reconnaissance level; produce a survey report that would provide historic contexts for surveyed properties; and to complete a national register Nomination for the Town of Lawrenceville Historic District.

The work was carried out by Bill Laffoon, an architect, and native of Lawrenceville, and Nat Neblett, an architect with extensive background in historic architecture. Nat also is a native of Lawrenceville, and recently retired back there just before the beginning of this project. The Lawrenceville Railroad Yard had been identified as a possible archaeological resource. Douglas McLearen, Senior Archaeologist with Cultural Resources, Inc, Williamsburg, assisted with that part of the survey and report.

The survey covered most of the incorporated limits of the town. The survey was centered around the Courthouse, downtown, and along the major roads that led through Lawrenceville to the Courthouse. The survey included the Atlantic & Danville Railway through the town and areas of the town that developed with the growth of the railroad. That portion of Saint Paul's College within the town limits, was included in the survey.

The survey followed the boundary proposed in the Preliminary Information Form. The survey was extended past those preliminary boundaries to include significant and contributing resources found in the field.

The project will produce:

- 1. A Survey Report, 10 bound copies (5 to DHR, 5 to Lawrenceville) 2 loose-leaf copies (1 to DHR, 1 to Lawrenceville), and 2 computer diskettes of the final survey report.
- 2. Photographic Negatives, bound and processed to DHR standards, submitted to DHR.
- 3. National Register Nomination Form with 2 sets of photographs, negatives, inventory of the proposed historic district, maps, a slide show, and general presentations meeting the project requirements.

VIII SURVEY FINDINGS

The survey covered 470 resources, sufficient to prepare a Nomination Form for a historic district. An IPS Chronological List, IPS Wuzit List and a Historic Context List are included in the Appendices. The Nomination Form is also included in the appendix.

SUMMARY DESCRIPTION

The Lawrenceville Historic District includes a large part of the incorporated area of the county seat of Brunswick County. The district includes the historic core, the courthouse square, several commercial blocks of the late 19th and early 20th centuries lining Main and Hicks streets and residential areas with dwellings primarily from the last quarter of the 19th century through 1940. The largest concentration of domestic architecture is from the period 1890 to 1920, built principally for the labor force of the Atlantic and Danville Railroad. Among the styles of architecture represented are Federal, Greek Revival, Queen Anne, Bungalow, Craftsman. American Four-Square and Colonial Revival. Public resources include a 1906 high school, a baseball diamond-swimming pool complex built by the CWA and WPA in 1934 and 1935, and a 1912 elevated water tank. Saint Paul's College, founded in 1888, occupies a large site in the northern part of the historic district.

ARCHITECTURAL ANALYSIS

The site of Lawrenceville is characterized by rising, rolling land, the town being centered on the crest of a hill. No parts of the town have been subjected to severe destruction by natural disasters such as flood. earthquake, tornado or cyclone. The town has never suffered the effects of a disastrous, wide spread fire.

The Tourist's Pocket Map of the State of Virginia... published in 1836 shows one town in Brunswick County. Lawrenceville, located at the intersection of a north-south and an east-west road. "A Table of Principal Stage Routes through Virginia" on this map includes two serving Lawrenceville, one daily from Petersburg to Warrenton, NC, (85 miles) and another thrice weekly from Lawrenceville to Halifax Courthouse (95 miles).

In Historical Collections of Virginia, ... published in 1846. Henry Howe describes the town: "Lawrenceville, the county seat, is 73 miles west of south from Richmond. It is a neat village, presently situated on a branch of the Meherrin River and contains 2 churches and about 25 dwellings." One of these churches, Saint Andrew's Episcopal, and several of the dwellings remain, though all have been substantially altered. Lawrenceville has few buildings predating the last quarter of the nineteenth century.

Arguably the most intact is a 19th century structure, the county courthouse, (PHOTO 1) constructed in 1854. Situated on a town block adjacent to the site of Lawrenceville's first courthouse of 1784, the Greek Revival prostyle building is tetrastyle featuring massive brick masonry Doric columns covered with rendering worked to form flutes. The two story brick masonry building is entered from the west through double doors into a stairwell with offices on the first floor. A double staircase leads to a centered door into the second floor courtroom. Above the portico straddling the gable roof is a bell tower, square in plan, with louvered sides and surmounted by a weather vane. This building is listed individually in the National Register of Historic Places. The nomination was approved on 12-31-74. An addition to house offices and an elevator has been constructed across the rear (east) elevation of the building.

The courthouse square (PHOTO 2) is the site of other public buildings related to county administration. The County Clerk's Office stands adjacent the courthouse to the south. The Confederate monument, NW of the courthouse, is directly in front of the Bruce library that now houses the county museum. The old library stands on the site of Lawrenceville's first courthouse. The county jail stood for many years just south of the Clerk's Office. The old jail was abandoned and was later demolished after the Sherriff's Office opened at 120 East Hick Street. Lawrenceville's third courthouse. dedicated to the memory of Governor Albertis S. Harrison, Jr., has been constructed on the site and was occupied on the spring of 1999.

The west side of Main Street (PHOTO 3) directly across from Courthouse Square is devoted exclusively to commercial and office use and has evolved as the center of the business district. Commercial buildings turn the corner at Hicks Street and occupy both sides of Hicks (PHOTO 4) west to Sharp Street.

The major portion of the present building stock in the "downtown" areas of Main and Hicks results from the economic stimulus of the railroad. These buildings, contiguous along both streets and from one to three stories high, date primarily from the last decade of the nineteenth and the first three decades of the twentieth centuries. No residences, churches, schools, or other such usages interrupt this wall of commerce.

Two limestone structures intended for occupancy by banks stand out in design quality. One built for Brunswick Bank and Trust Company at 219 North Main Street, the other for Brunswick County State Bank at 128 West Hicks Street remain reasonably intact but have been converted to accommodate other uses.

The oldest building retaining its original name and site is the Sledge and Barkley Company (PHOTO 5) at 311-313 Main Street. The company was established in 1896 in the southern portion of 311, then a two story brick store building with stone trim. Business success resulted in expansion over the entire building.

A third story was added, and a similar building erected adjacent to the north at 313, and a brick warehouse was added to the rear.

The W.S. Peebles Co. (now Peebles) grew to occupy several adjacent buildings of varying sizes and heights (PHOTO 6) at the northwest corner of Main and Hicks streets. Immediately prior to World War II the facades along both streets were unified by application of a moderne front of brick and peach-colored carrara glass featuring a rounded corner punctuated by small display windows. Although the glass and display windows were removed in a recent remodeling, the general moderne effect remains.

The Helig Myers building at 110 East Hicks Street, formerly Thomas Hardware, is an imposing two story commercial building c. 1914. Although the first floor has been altered, the façade above retains the decorative brickwork patterns which detail the windows, parapet and cornice. Next door on the corner of east Hicks and North Main streets the three story building c. 1910 was occupied for a long period by a drug store with offices and apartment over. Lawrenceville's first lending library, organized by the Woman's Club, occupied rooms in the rear of this building.

Almost all the older commercial buildings on Main and Hicks streets have been remodeled on the first floor to reflect changing occupancy and fashion. Most remain intact above the storefront. Today few of the upper floors are occupied.

Saint Paul's College, founded in 1888 by James Solomon Russell, was located on the site of a tannery north of the business district (PHOTO 7) along Church Street. The first building, the Saul Building (1883), is a small two story frame building residential in scale which housed the school. Now carefully preserved, it serves as a museum. Together with the Saul Building, the Saint Paul's Memorial Chapel (PHOTO 8), a brick Gothic Revival building with attached bell tower (1904), and the Fine Arts Building, built to be the Principal's residence in 1900, were listed in the National Register of Historic Places in 1979. Other early buildings remaining in use are the Letcher Infirmary (1922), the Chicago Building (1928), Emery Hall (1930), the (PHOTO 9) Scott Administration Building (1932), and the Johnston Memorial Building (1933). To meet changing needs these buildings have been remodeled over subsequent years. Many of the earlier buildings on campus, for example, Saint Paul's Memorial Chapel, were built by student labor as a training exercise in the building trades. Since World War II the institution has attained college status and facilities have been greatly enlarged through the construction of new buildings.

The coming of the Atlantic and Danville Railroad to Lawrenceville boosted the town's economy immeasurably. The single track crosses Rose Creek on a high wood trestle on the town's eastern border, passes through a cut south of the Hicks Street business district, then follows the south edge of New Street where a leveled site was developed as the freight yard and shops. The track then passes across Belt Road and the corporate limits to the west. A passenger station, razed c. 1958, and a freight depot, razed c. 1991, stood along South Street. The railroad shops, established in the 1890s, proved to be a boon to the local economy over the years, but closed in the 1950s. Recent archaeological investigations have focused on an area in which is located subsurface evidence of the yard and shops as well as the visible remains of a large turntable and the foundation of a roundhouse. (PHOTO 10) Only one building associated with the railyard, the car repair shed, is extant. Extensively altered, it continues in service as a storage building for the Southern States Cooperative. Freight trains from Norfolk still serve Lawrenceville, but the track west of town has been abandoned and removed.

The block west of Park Street bounded by Second Avenue to the north and Third Avenue to the south. and a small branch feeding Great Creek to the west, was the seat of public education in Lawrenceville for a number of years. In 1906 the "new" high school (PHOTO 11). a substantial two-story brick building with a slate mansard roof, was constructed on the summit of a hill. Some years later a small one-story frame building was built on Third Avenue just south of the high school to serve primary grades. In 1927 a brick high school was constructed to the north at the corner of Park Street and Second Avenue. At this time the older high school became the elementary school. In the 1950s a new consolidated county high school was constructed northeast of Lawrenceville, and the 1927 building was abandoned and subsequently demolished. With the removal of the primary grades to newer facilities outside of town in 1976, the 1906 high school and the frame building remain as a learning center. No graded public school facilities remain within the town limits of Lawrenceville.

Lawrenceville's churches are scattered throughout the residential areas. Saint Andrew's Episcopal (PHOTO 12), the oldest congregation, occupies a wood-frame Gothic Revival building (1829) that has been altered since construction. The church stands at the corner of Church Street and Windsor Avenue. Lawrenceville Methodist (PHOTO 13) is located at 300 Church Street across from Saint Paul's College adjacent the downtown commercial district. The large brick building in the Tudor Gothic style results from several enlargement campaigns. Lawrenceville Baptist Church (PHOTO 14) occupies a site on the east side of South Hicks Street. Over the years, the site has been augmented by acquisition and destruction of several neighboring dwellings. The brick building (1901), a curious hybrid of Colonial and Gothic Revival, has more recent additions to the rear (east) which are closer to Colonial in style. Lawrenceville Presbyterian (PHOTO 15) occupies a small wood-frame building on a constrained site at High Street and Second Avenue. The plain weatherboard Colonial Revival meeting house remains much as it was constructed in 1898. Modest office and church house additions have been made to the rear (west).

Windsor Avenue, reaching from Saint Andrew's Episcopal Church northwest across the town limits at Windsor developed as one of the prominent residential streets. The street was named for the substantial Greek Revival summer home (PHOTO 16) built in 1848 by Dr. William Webb Wilkens, and extensively altered in 1912 by William Wingfield Meredith. The houses (PHOTO 17) which remain along the street date primarily from the 1880s to the 1930s, the period of Lawrenceville's greatest growth. Several of the town's prominent merchants built houses on this street. Dossie Barkley built the large brick Queen Anne dwelling (PHOTO 18) at 506 in 1892 while William S. Peebles occupied the two story Colonial revival house at 701. The street also attracted bankers, professional men and insurance agents who lined the street with substantial houses rather plain in detail but exhibiting a variety of architectural styles. One of the more unusual houses is located at 401 (PHOTO 19) where Windsor veers northward from Church. This house, constructed by a son of the Davie family who occupied a large frame house (razed) across Church Street, was said to have been designed to be reminiscent of his wife's remembered home in her native Norway. A large bungalow-type built c. 1901, the house is of cream colored brick with stone trim and features large fixed sash windows and a broad, sweeping roof.

Across Church Street from 401 Windsor Avenue are two houses built in the mid 1930s by two of Lawrenceville's prominent professional men. The Vaiden residence at 502 Church Street(PHOTO 20), built by a physician, is in the Tudor revival style. A prominent attorney in Lawrenceville in the 1930s. Albertis S. Harrison, Jr. built his Colonial Revival house next door at 504 Church Street before his political career led to the governorship. These houses, both built by Fred Hyde, Lawrenceville's leading contractor at the time, remain little changed by subsequent alterations.

South Main Street, from the railroad bridge to the southern corporate limits, also developed as a prominent residential street. Frequently referred to as "Turnbull Street" the street was home to many members of that family who, around the turn of the century, built several substantial houses in the neighborhood. The two-story wood-frame house (1909) located at 508 South Main (PHOTO 21) is one which remains. The Charles May house (308 South Main, PHOTO 22), the Emory Elmore house (402 South Main) and the Robert Stark house (106 East Fourth Avenue) were built by the husbands of Turnbull sisters after their marriages. Perhaps the oldest house (c. 1810) in Lawrenceville, 202 South Main, was extensively remodeled by Dr Turnbull immediately prior to the turn of the century. Another early house, 103 South Main. located diagonally across the street, has been altered over the years but retains a duplex quarters building in the rear (west). Several merchants settled on South Main, W. T. Sledge at 210 and Morris Bloom at 306. Three members of the Peebles family also built houses in this neighborhood in the 1930-40': Marion W. Peebles, 110 East Fifth Avenue, William S. Peebles, Jr., who razed an older Turnbull house to construct "Sunnyside" (PHOTO 23) at 514 South Main Street, and C. Wesley Peebles whose house "Holly Hill" is set back across the corporate limits although the entrance gate is located at 600 Turnbull Street.

The houses along High and Park streets and along First, Second and Third avenues off Belt Road are primarily middle class and workingman's dwellings built after the advent of the railroad. Typically these were of wood frame construction supported on brick pier foundations and covered with hipped or gable metal roofs. Almost invariably they featured front porches large enough to accommissible family gatherings during the hotter months.

Six houses (PHOTO 24) aligned along the south side of Third Avenue west of Park Street constitute the most intact group of "railroad houses". Although the corner house has been remode.ed beyond recognition, the other five retain much of their original character on the street side. This area of town was developed by the Lawrenceville Improvement Company.

Workingman's houses are found also along Fifth Avenue west of South Hicks and along Walnut and West Fourth Avenue, in an area known as "Newtown". The proximity to the railroad shops suggests that a large percentage of the residents found employment there.

The town recreational facilities consist of a swimming pool complex and a baseball field built on a site east of Courthouse Square down the hill in the Rose Creek bottomland adjacent to the railroad track. Built during the 1930s, this public works project was intended to boost the local economy. The concrete swimming pool (PHOTO 25) was equipped with high and low diving boards, a transverse rope to demarcate the shallow and deep ends and a wide concrete apron to accommodate sunbathers. Nearby was a wading pool for toddlers and a wood frame dressing/shower/concession building. This facility now is leased to a private club for operation.

The baseball diamond (PHOTO 26) consists of a regulation minor league playing field with tiered seating behind home plate and extending towards first and third bases. The grand stand is of reinforced concrete with wood bench seating, covered with a high wood-frame roof. Dugouts are located at each end of the seating area and a wood-frame concession stand is located north of the seating area up from third base. This facility, now known as Sonny Wholey Field, has been maintained and continues to serve as a site for ballgames.

Lawrenceville is not characterized by industrial activity and little with staying power has developed over the years. The most thriving industry at present seems to be the ice plant, fuel and beverage distributorship developed by the Pecht family along the railroad track at Park Street. This business occupies several buildings at that site, most of which are of recent construction. Another large industrial facility is the garment factory, now vacant, located at the corner of Sharp and New Hicks Street. Other than a large tobacco warehouse and a structural steel fabricating facility, both relatively recent and both located on West Fifth Avenue between South and Park Streets, no other industrial facility of any size is found in the historic district.

Statement of Significance

The Lawrenceville Historic District is associated with the Town of Lawrenceville's long and notable history, covering periods of growth and decline, and shaped by outside events and ones of its own making. The historic district overlays a crossing of colonial stage roads that became the seat of Brunswick County-tong before Lawrenceville was created by the Virginia General Assembly in 1814. Located strategically between Danville and Norfolk in the heart of the Virginia-Carolina tobacco country. Lawrenceville came to prominence in the last two decades of the 19th century and the first three decades of the 20th century. Lawrenceville's prosperity was directly related to the coming of Atlantic and Danville Railroad in 1891, which tied the town to the national economy, and led to major residential and commercial development in the town. In the same period, Lawrenceville became known for its association with St. Paul's College, a private black college founded by James Solomon Russell, a former slave and Episcopal minister, in 1888. The Great Depression of the 1930s dampened the prosperity that had come with the railroad and caused the failure of nearly all of the town's banks. However. Lawrenceville took advantage of President Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal programs to undertake several notable public works in 1934-35, including a baseball stadium, bath house and swimming pool for the community. Lawrenceville's ability to shape its own identity over time is especially well reflected in the town's remarkable and wide-ranging collection of late 19th and early 20th century buildings and structures. These dwellings, churches, schools, college buildings, commercial and government buildings, and recreational and railroad-related resources (including archaeological resources) represent the architectural history of the town in its period of greatest growth and prosperity.

The Lawrenceville Historic District is eligible for listing on the National Register of Historic Places under criterion A because of its association with major historical developments of the Town of Lawrenceville from 1784-1949, especially in the areas commerce, government, education, ethnic heritage, recreation, transportation and religion. The themes of education, ethnic heritage and religion are especially well represented in the district by its inclusion of the historic buildings of St. Paul's College. The district is eligible for listing under criterion C because of its well preserved collection of in the first find that the first fir

19th and early 20th century commercial and residential buildings. representing a wide range of architectural styles from the Federal and Greek Revival to the Queen Anne, Bungalow, Craftsman, American Four-Square, and Colonial Revival. The district is eligible under criterion D because of its potential to yield important information about the Lawrenceville railroad yard and shops, an integral part of the town's development as a major railroad town in the period 1891-1949. Recent archaeological investigations carried out under the sponsorship of the Town and the Department of Historic Resources have revealed subsurface evidence of the Atlantic and Danville Railroad yard and shops as well as the base of a railroad turntable and the remains of a roundhouse. Remains of other railroad-related buildings, shown to exist on early 20th-century insurance maps, may also be present.

History

The site of Lawrenceville has been the seat of Brunswick County since Greensville County was split off from Brunswick in 1781. Brunswick County had been formed in 1720, bordered on the east by Surry and Isle of Wight counties, lying above the Virginia-North Carolina dividing line, south of the Nottoway River and extending westward to the Blue Ridge. As western settlement and population expanded, Brunswick would be carved into as many as twelve new counties. County seats were required to be sited as close to the center of the county as possible which led to the 1781 courthouse relocation to Lawrenceville from the mid-18th century site. The Meherrin River flowing southwest across Brunswick's boundaries was the primary natural feature that divided the county. Although the geographical center of the county was south of the Meherrin, the courthouse and county seat were placed above the north side of the river. Justices of the County Court involved themselves in selection of the site for the courthouse. A story is told of one of the justice's wives falling off her horse while crossing the river to inspect the new site and "gallantly he declared that it [the county seat] must be place above the Meherrin so she should never again suffer such an indignity." ¹

The first Lawrenceville courthouse site selected was property of Jones Williams who was required to build a prison, stock and pillory and to provide a meeting place for the court in his house until the courthouse was completed. The courthouse was built in 1784 on the courthouse square, just north of the present courthouse.²Like all county seats, there was a great deal of activity during the sessions of the court, with those having business before the justices traveling from around the county and conducting other commerce as well.

Lawrenceville. while the county seat of Brunswick since 1781, did not gain its name or town status until 1816. "On January 22, 1814, the General Assembly decreed that twenty acres of land belonging to Peggy Williams, daughter of Philip Williams, be laid off into lots." This new town would be called Lawrenceville. ² Legend persists that the town was named for a race horse named Lawrence. Horse racing and wagering were popular in Virginia at the time. William Kirby who owned much property in the Lawrenceville area had built a race track toward the end of the 18th century is said to have owned Lawrence. Another story is that Lawrence was owned by Colonel William Rice. Rice had married Peggy Williams. Others say that the town may have been named for Captain James Lawrence, who died defending his ship in the War of 1812, after exclaiming "Don't give up the ship."³

Throughout its history, the town has been a crossroads. Roads and stagecoach routes were the major transportation arteries of the county and many roads, including Old Stage Road went through Lawrenceville. ⁴ These roads brought traffic to the courthouse and carried the county's tobacco crop to market. Early life in Lawrenceville centered around the courthouse. The town that thrived around the courthouse was home to mostly artisans and craftsmen, laborers and domestic servants.⁵ Ordinaries were established to serve travelers. Phil Williams maintained an ordinary at the courthouse. A Masonic Hall was built across from the courthouse square. Brunswick County's chapter. Lodge Number 52 was chartered in 1797.

A notable event occurred in Lawrenceville on August 9. 1837. Daniel Dugger, manager of the Dugger Hotel in Lawrenceville the owner and breeder of the famous racehorse Wagner, was dining with George Dromgoole and others after a dance at the Masonic Hall. General Dromgoole had served in the General Assembly and the US Congress and would soon campaign for re-election to Congress. The subject of politics had been forbidden and a political question had come up to Dugger. Dromgoole, who had consumed a liberal amount, objected with a loud outburst before Dugger could turn the question aside. The insulted Dugger quickly struck Dromgoole from his chair. The next day the two gentlemen settled their differences peacefully. However as elections were nearing the press and politics fanned the flames of the controversy by publicizing and urging a duel. The resulting duel led to Dugger's death and Dromgoole's reelection. Dromgoole, nicknamed "Old Drum" by his enemies, was later a Democratic leader in the US Congress and is perhaps the best known public figure around Lawrenceville and Brunswick in the early part of the nineteenth century.⁶

The earliest institutional building that survives in the town is St. Andrew's Church (1829). The configuration of the church has changed little except for the loss of its old tower and the relocation of its entryway. The present courthouse (NRHP, 1974) was built in 1854 by Robert Kirkland and E. R. Turnbull, the clerk, at a large sum of $7000 and continues to serve as the centerpiece for the town. The relatively large sum spent on the building is indicative of the prosperity of the tobacco-growing county at mid century.⁷

Aside from mustering of troops and forming reserves, there was little military activity in Lawrenceville during the Civil War. One exception was Kountz's a raid on Lawrenceville and its courthouse in 1864. Edward R. Turnbull, the county clerk spread a Masonic apron over courthouse records and left before the Union troops' arrival. A Union guard returned Turnbull's apron to his home. After the raiders departure, it was discovered that nothing valuable had been destroyed and that county records from 1732 were still intact.

Following the Civil War, Brunswick County and Lawrenceville were very poor. Sharecropping was widespread. Charles E. May described Lawrenceville in 1877 as "a very small village consisting of a courthouse, a few small stores, two blacksmith shops, a shoemaker's shop and several dwellings." Henry Cofeland had a blacksmith shop, east of the courthouse at the foot of the hill above Rose Creek and next to it a small store at the corner on Church Street. On the street behind the courthouse were offices for several lawyers: WHE Meritt, Robert Turnbull, and Judge Hicks. The "Old Corner" Lewis building was at the corner of Main and Hicks Streets. On the site of the modern Nations Bank building on Main Street once stood a barroom and store and a Masonic Lodge to the rear.⁸

The end of the War brought emancipation and with it came James Solomon Russell to Lawrenceville. Russell was born a slave in the Palmer Springs area of Mecklenburg County in 1857. After the War, Russell had been encouraged by his mother and the County Superintendent of Public Education to pursue an education. He joined a neighborhood school paying tuition with eggs. Cash from a tobacco crop sent him to Hampton Institute. Returning to Mecklenburg, Russell taught school there and his interests led to becoming an Episcopal minister. Russell attended Branch Theological Seminary, Petersburg under the direction and guidance of Confererate Major Giles Cooke, rector of Saint Stephen's Church, a builder of schools for emancipated youth, and reputed to be the last surviving member of Gen. Robert E. Lee's staff. ⁹After seminary at Petersburg and ordination, Russell arrived in Lawrenceville in 1882. Russell had been sent as a new deacon for the nucleus of a black congregation at Saint Andrew's. He immediately began his work in religion and education for the black community and later organized congregations in Warfield, Palmer Springs, Diamond Grove, Bracey, Forksville and Edgerton.

Russell was determined to build a parish school in Lawrenceville. James Saul of Philadelphia contributed funds for construction of a three-room frame school, still standing, known as the Saul Building. The school opened in Lawrenceville in 1888 and later evolved into the present Saint Paul's College. The Saul Building, listed on the National Register of Historic Places, is on a hill facing Church Street. The hill was once the site of a tannery. Russell slowly acquired land to expand the school's campus, purchasing the Rose Creek Plantation, once owned by John Heartwell Cocke, an absentee landlord from Powhatan County. In Russell's writings he noted that Rose Creek Plantation was "sort of a supply station for the breeding and training of slaves, from whence they were sent to other plantations as needed." Rose Creek Plantation had log homes for overseers and mud houses for slaves. These mud houses, often whitewashed, were still standing in the 1930s.¹⁰

In 1893 the school was incorporated. Education at St. Paul's emphasized training for trades. Although the famous Booker T. Washington-W. E. B. Du Bois controversy did not surface until 1903, Russell added an academic department in the 1890-91 school session.¹¹ The Saint Paul's Memorial Chapel was built in 1904. Saint Paul's students built the entire building, including making the bricks. Prior to the building of the Chapel, all buildings were of frame construction. In the early years of the college, Saint Paul's buildings would be built, wholly or in part, by its students. The buildings erected by 1912 include the Saul Building (1888), Webster Hall (1888), The Long Island Building (1892), Saint Paul's Memorial Chapel (1906), First Union Trade Building (1907) and The Science Laboratory (1908).¹² All these buildings form an integral part of the Lawrenceville Historic District.

By the turn of the century Lawrenceville began to grow and prosper.¹³ New jobs were opening up. All this resulted from the coming of the railroads to the county.¹⁴ Saint Paul's students provided man power and skills learned at the school for building expansion that came with the growth of the town. James Solomon Russell, in his book, Adventure in Faith reviewed an article from the Richmond Times-Dispatch that read. "Because they will work at any honest job, the students of Saint Paul's have the good will of Lawrenceville. Nowhere is there better understanding between the races. For nine years, Saint Paul's did all the wiring in Lawrenceville and furnished the ice and electric current to the town."

The Atlantic & Danville Railroad was chartered in 1882, authorizing construction of a railroad connecting a deep water port on the James River with the City of Danville, to the west. The A&D came to the county in 1889, running through Belfield (later renamed Emporia) to Edgerton, just east of Lawrenceville. Railroad building west of Lawrenceville proceeded at a faster pace. All along the way new towns were established. South Hill, now west of Lawrenceville, was laid out and surveyed by the railroad financiers.¹⁵ The biggest boost to the town came with the completion of the Atlantic and Danville line, extending to Danville 1891.

The A&D line was built by Benjamin Newgass, an Englishman. The terminal shops and offices were located in Lawrenceville, the mid-point between Pinner's Point, Norfolk and Danville where the trains would turn around. The remains of a large turntable and the foundations of an impressive roundhouse survive just under the surface of an open field beside the railroad tracks. Mr. Newgass contracted with laborers in Lawrenceville to lay much of the track. Originally there were two depots, terminal shops, an 8-stall engine house, and carpentry and car shops. By the turn of the century, Lawrenceville had become a railroad town. Open and operating until 1952, the railroad shops in Lawrenceville served as a significant boost to the economic well being of the town. The car repair shop is now used as a warehouse by Southern States Cooperative.

Newgass also bought land west of Lawrenceville between Windsor Avenue and High Street. He laid out streets, sectioned it into lots and developed it as a residential part of town. This development was essential for housing since the railroad operation in Lawrenceville eventually employed over 200 residents. Most of the dwellings in the historic district date from the period 1890 to 1920. The change in the town's population mirrors the period of greatest growth. In 1890, Lawrenceville's population was 305 residents. That number would increase to 760 in 1900 and to 1.733 residents in 1910.

A corollary to the railroad activity was increased commerce in Lawrenceville. Before the railroad had even recorded its first deed, P.I. Bostwick of South Carolina bought a large parcel of land along Main Street across from the courthouse. This area became the commercial area for the town, with banks, shops, and service buildings. Many of the commercial structures along Main Street date from the period 1900 to 1930. Florist shops, jewelry stores, drugstores and grocery establishments thrived.

Bostick built the first brick building in Lawrenceville in 1880 (other than the courthouse and clerk's office) and it is still in use today at 233 North Main Street by Brunswick Insurance Agency. Sledge and Barkley, 307 North Main Street, built the second brick building nearby. Change and growth were evident in the town by 1910. Buildings had sprung up the length of Main Street and had spread west down Hicks Street. The building at 321 North Main Street(Perry's Clothing), formerly served as a meat market that was widely patronized and owned and operated by one of Lawrenceville's most prosperous black citizens. Next to the meat market was Heather & Prince Drug Store, then Osborne & Son, Groceries next to Sledge & Barkley. Thomas Hardware began at the current Peebles location, then moved across the street to the present Helig-Myers building in 1911 and Peebles Dry Goods moved into the corner of Main and Hicks. In 1910 the sidewalks were still wooden. The Thomas Hardware-Furniture building was the first building with electric lights in Lawrenceville.¹⁶

In 1906 Lawrenceville's citizens awoke to their civic duty and built a new high school at 405 Park Street. An election was held approving a bond issue to raise money for the school. Trustees personally raised the money, and built the school, before the bond issue was voted. In 1907 the enrollment was 300 students and seven teachers. I. E. Spatig, a member of the County Board of Supervisors, described the school as a magnificent pile in a fine oak grove, on an eminence that would stand for generations as a monument to civic pride.¹⁷

Churches kept pace during this period, with congregations building to meet the spiritual needs of the growing community. The county is often referred to at the birthplace of Methodism as the first Methodist circuit in Virginia was founded in Brunswick County in 1774. Richard Sharp gave a parcel of land, site of the present Lawrenceville United Methodist Church, to a young Methodist congregation in 1847 and a church at 300 Church Street, facing Main Street was built. In 1906 it was replaced with the present church, a larger structure of brick facing Church Street. The congregation grew steadily over the years, reaching a membership of 500 in 1975.¹⁸

Baptist congregations had organized in the county before 1804. Mrs. Ida Britt and Mrs. Anna Shell raised money for a Baptist Church that was built near Diamond Grove Farm, east of Lawrenceville in 1887. That congregation later voted to move to Lawrenceville. A new brick Lawrenceville Baptist Church, at 304 South Hicks Street, was dedicated in July 1901, and with additions and remodeling, is still in use today.¹⁹

The first Presbyterian church was formed in the county in 1826. Lawrenceville Presbyterian, a frame church at 415 High Street, remains largely as it was constructed in 1898. The congregation is still active.

By 1912 Lawrenceville built its own electric generating plant. The kerosene streetlights were converted to electricity and a few homes and stores led the trend to this new means of illuminating buildings. The town of Lawrenceville in 1912 had put through a bond issue for $60,000 to build a water filtration plant, a gravity sewage system, three miles of trunk sewer line, two and one-half miles of cast iron pipe, and an electric generating plant with distribution and street lighting. A few homes and businesses obtained lighting and water prior to 1912 by tapping into the system at Saint Paul's School. The school had a private generator and pump. In 1924 Lawrenceville received state and federal monies and paved the streets in the town.

Perhaps the greatest evidence of the depression in Lawrenceville was the failure of the four banks in Lawrenceville. The First National Bank had merged with the Brunswick County State Bank, and the Bank of Lawrenceville merged with the Brunswick Bank and Trust in efforts to stay open. The Brunswick Bank and Trust remained open the longer of the two, until 1936, but then failed. The Farmers and Merchants Bank of Brodnax had opened a branch in Lawrenceville in 1933 with Frank Newsom as president, and remained solvent throughout the depression.²⁰

The Town responded most directly to the crisis of the Great Depression by initiating several notable public works projects. New Deal undertakings in the town included paving of many streets, curb and gutter improvements on all the streets, and the construction of a community swimming pool, bath house and an impressive baseball stadium.²¹

The baseball stadium, a CWA project was dedicated in September 1934, with reports in the local papers that Frank Newsom and Robert Pecht were forming a Lawrenceville baseball club. By 1935 the Lawrenceville Green Sox, relying on local talent, would begin play as a minor league independent team. Competition was mainly from the Virginia League, local clubs and Carolina teams. Lawrenceville refused to join a league as games were scheduled on Saturday and Sunday. The town's businesses closed Wednesday afternoons with all day Saturday devoted to brisk business. By 1939, Larry Williams reorganized the Lawrenceville "Greenies" and joined the Southside Virginia League. The team featured "ringers" from college baseball teams in search of a path to the major leagues. Contracts were signed with players. Opening day in May 1939 found 1,800 spectators at the Lawrenceville stadium.²²

Following WWII. the Lawrenceville club would be reorganized in 1948 as a farm team of the St. Louis Cardinals organization for two seasons of play in the Virginia League. Branch Rickey, often referred to as baseball's greatest revolutionary, is credited with creating baseball's farm system as president and general manager of the St. Louis Cardinals in 1917. When Rickey took over, the Cardinals were a weak team with little cash. Rather than buy stars, Rickey decided to grow his own. Through his farm system, Rickey amassed 800 players under contract on 32 teams, keeping St. Louis atop the standings most every year, with four world-series championships, from 1919 until 1942.²³

The Lawrenceville Cardinals completed the 1948 season at the bottom of the Virginia League standings with a record of 39 wins, 98 losses. The team name was changed to the Robins. In the final 1949 season the Lawrenceville Robins were once again at the bottom of the standings with an improved record of 45 wins, 76 losses. Walter "Sonny" Wholey had joined the team as a manager in 1949.²⁴ Wholey remained in Lawrenceville as an educator and youth sports coach. The Lawrenceville baseball stadium and field has been named in his honor.

In 1935 a local land surveyor, Brooks Price prepared plans for the swimming pool and bath house. Constructed as a WPA project, it opened on the 4th of July, 1936. Construction of the pool seems to have been supervised by most everyone in the Town, and commonly referred to as the "pond." There were claims of a 300,000 gallon pool, including diving boards, with a filter system providing "purified water" constantly recirculated. The baseball stadium and pool with ancillary buildings are rare surviving structures, still in use today although the pool's original filter system is not in operation.

Soon after the railroad was in operation at the turn of the century, a gleaming red roadster arrived in Lawrenceville on a railroad flat car. Dr. W H Lewis had purchased the first automobile in the town. A large group of townspeople had gathered at the railroad siding. Dr. Lewis, not knowing how to drive, found the instruction manual, got into the car, and amid cheers from the townspeople, drove it down the ramp on to his home on Windsor Avenue.²⁵ The train and car were both powerful symbols of the era. The railroad would bring growth and prosperity to the town early. The automobile, in the future, would unknowingly reverse the effect.

After World War II, Lawrenceville's prosperity began to wane. The automobile and associated highway building programs gave easier access to businesses across the region. Lawrenceville was "by-passed" in 1961. US Highway 58 from Norfolk, running east to west, parallel to the A&D Railroad line, across the state through Danville and Bristol, skirted around the south side of the town. Merchants complained that the town's businesses would be isolated from most through-county traffic. This isolation from the new preferred means of transportation, the automobile and new highways, allowed Lawrenceville's historic resources to remain intact, with development patterns relatively unchanged.

Brunswick Ice & Coal, along the railroad track, erected a new "Quonset hut" warehouse on New Street, just after the end of the WWII. That business, still operated by the founding Pecht family, is the largest private industrial enterprise in the town today. Recently company facilities have expanded for beverage warehousing and purified ice plant operations.

WS Peebles & Co continued to expand its department and grocery stores in Virginia and North Carolina after WWII. The department stores concentrated on clothing under the "Peebles" name and grocery stores operated as "Star Value". The department store continued to operate at 203 North Main Street. A new Star Value grocery was built in 1955 at 301-5 New Hicks Street. The old Peebles Garment Building at 135 West Hicks Street was remodeled for the company's new headquarters. The headquarters moved to South Hill, adjacent to Interstate 85 in the early 1980s and the garment building was again remodeled for a new library in 1985. The old library on the courthouse square now serves as a museum for the County Historical Society.

Albertis S Harrison practiced law in Lawrenceville from 1928 until 1957, serving as county Commonwealth Attorney for 14 years before election to the State senate. His law offices were located on the 2nd floor the bank annex, conveniently located across the street from the old courthouse. He was elected Attorney General in 1957. Harrison moved from his home at 504 Church Street to Richmond after being elected Governor of Virginia in 1961. Harrison later served on the State Supreme Court, one of the few, if not the only person to serve in Virginia's three branches of government. The old jail site is beneath the new Albertis S. Harrison Courthouse, built in 1998 as a prominent new landmark on the historic courthouse square.

In the 1930s Saint Paul's College provided facilities for black students attending high school in the county. James Solomon Russell High School, north of town, was built in 1950 to serve as the county's black high school. The white county high schools were consolidated with a new Brunswick County High School, built east of town in 1955. The old Lawrenceville High School became the Lawrenceville

Elementary until it was closed in 1964 and town students moved to Totaro Elementary, outside of the town.

The town had long catered to the farm business. Wooden tobacco warehouses occupying lots on the east side of Court Street were all demolished by the 1970s with most new warehouses being constructed outside of town along the Lawrenceville Bypass. As the central trading center for a county whose main crop has long been tobacco, the large Planters Warehouse at 305 West 5th Avenue recalls the heyday of the tobacco economy in the southside county that remains active in Lawrenceville today.

After World War II, residential building in the town came as infill on vacant lots, or on lots created by the extension of the town's streets. Frame construction was the dominant construction for residential buildings during Lawrenceville's greatest period of growth at the turn of the century. Lawrenceville Brick & Tile Corporation expanded after WWII and brick became the most popular residential construction material. Brick Colonial Revival and Williamsburg style homes were built as infill and on the town's extended streets. Al Clary, a grading and excavation contractor was instrumental in building Lawrenceville Hills, a residential development south of the town. The demand for residential building in the town would diminish.

Commerating the Nation's bicentennial in 1976, the county's only traffic light was installed at the corner of North Main and Church streets. New town office and fire station at 400 North Main were built in 1976. The Nations Bank building at 300 North Main was built in 1977. The County courthouse and Clerk's Office were remodeled and expanded in 1975. William Moseley was the architect for the bank, municipal building and the courthouse. Moseley had grown up in Lawrenceville at 601 South Main Street. The old jail at the southeast corner of the Courthouse Square went out of use in the 1970s and a new jail was built across from the square at 114-20 East Hicks Street in 1990. Two natives of Brunswick County. Bill Lafoon and Nat Neblett. of the firm of RML Architects and Engineers undertook an architectural survey of the Town of Lawrenceville in 1997-1999, under the joint sponsorship of the Town of Lawrenceville and the Virginia Department of Historic Resources. That survey provided the basis for the nomination of the Lawrenceville Historic District for listing on the Virginia Landmarks Register and the National Register of Historic Places. The survey included an archaeological component, a Phase I archaeological survey of the Lawrenceville railroad yard, conducted by Douglas McLearen of the firm of Cultural Resources. Inc. The survey revealed portions of side tracks and spurs, remains of the brick foundations of a roundhouse and machine shop, the base of a turntable, and an extant car repair shed with modern shed additions. The focus of the field work was identification of the location and size of the turntable, which were photographed and carefully mapped. Based on the fieldwork and detailed map analysis, the survey revealed the remains of a roundhouse and attached machine shop, dating to the period ca. 1907. Comparison of feature dimensions and with those of the Sanborn maps indicates that pieces of brick foundation that form a curving line about 140 feet long is the south end of the roundhouse.

The Town of Lawrenceville today is an outstanding example of a well-preserved turn of the century county seat. The streets, development patterns and the architectural character of residential, commercial, government, religious, educational and recreational structures remain intact. The new county courthouse remains on the original courthouse square. The railroad continues to serve industry. Saint Paul's College continues to educate and grow. Churches and congregations are still active. Residential dwellings from the turn of the century are occupied and maintained. Although downtown business has waned, the commercial blocks with a variety of storefronts are still intact. All that remains provided a valuable resource contributing to the town's future.

Verbal Boundary Description

SEE I" = 200' MAP OF HISTORIC DISTRICT

Boundary Justification

The Lawrenceville Historic District boundary is drawn to include the largest concentration of historic resources within the corporate limits of the Town of Lawrenceville, the county seat of Brunswick County. The corporate boundaries of the town were largely fixed by the early 19th century. Contributing resources include the courthouse, the courthouse square, the major public works projects of the New Deal era and the historic commercial district concentrated at the center of town, at the crossroads formed by Windsor Avenue from the north, North Main Street from the east, South Main Street from the south and South Hicks Street from the southwest. Other earlier residential dwellings and churches, found along these roads, within the corporate limits, are included in the district. Historic railroad resources along the Atlantic & Danville Railroad line, which runs east-west through the town and cuts the town in two, as well as related historic residential development west of the town center, both north and south of the railroad, are included within the boundaries of the historic district. To the north of the courthouse square, the district includes the historic educational, residential and religious buildings of St. Paul's College, the campus of which has been linked to the history of the town since St. Pauls' founding and largely contained within the town's corporate limits. Undeveloped areas of the town, and infill building after 1949 are excluded from the historic district.
