Summary Description

A wood-frame dwelling called Solitary Hall was built in 1778 on what is today the Liberty Hall property. About 1815, the existing brick structure was built onto the front of the wooden structure, creating an L-shape form. The brick house is a Federal-style brick, two-story, single-pile dwelling with a symmetrical five-bay façade, modillion cornice, gable roof, exterior end chimneys, and one and two-story frame additions built off of the side and rear elevations. On the front is a Victorian-era porch with slender, chamfered posts and turned spindle frieze, and deck roof with jig-sawn balustrade. There is also a circa 1815 brick dependency behind the house that is a significant, contributing building. Since the late 1700s, the home and its immediate curtilage of five acres have been in continuous possession of the Alexander/Read/Lee/Brown family. The parcel also includes two modern, non-contributing sheds.

Detailed Description

The five-bay façade is totally symmetrical, the centerpiece being the original double-leaf front door surmounted by a gauged-brick round arch and lighted transom, with the door jambs being recessed the depth of the walls. They are hand-carved with wooden fluting, braiding and paneling on the jamb. The original iron hardware remains. Most of the nine-over-nine wood sash windows with wavy glass remain in place throughout the house. The east (end) elevation has no window or door openings; however the west elevation has nine-over-nine sash flanking the chimney. The brick walls of the building are 15 inches thick, laid up in three-course common bond instead of Flemish bond, which would have been more typical at the time. Gauged-brick jack arches are used over the windows. The brick masonry retains the vast majority of its original sand/lime mortar. The original white penciling on the mortar joints survives in many places. The front elevation soffit is decorated with robust modillion blocks and plain fascia board. The rear elevation, however, has no ornament, only plain soffit and fascia boards. Photos from the 1950s show no change in this regard. The main roof is sheathed with standing-seam metal.

Within the brick part of the house is a wide central passage with stair, flanked by two rooms on each floor. All the rooms have carved chair rails, plain wainscoting, and ornately carved Federal-style mantels. The parlor (living room) mantel is the most notable, featuring elliptical sunburst patterns, intricate cove moldings and fluted pilasters. The dining room mantel is only slightly less elaborate. All of the woodwork is painted a solid white color. Each of the wall-depth door jams in this portion of this house are paneled.

In the 1970s, the family removed a substantial portion of the wood frame part at the back of the main house and replaced it with a new frame 2-story addition. The first floor of the new addition retains the floors from the original frame section and much of the foundation. At the same time, the house was expanded by the addition of two single-story rooms (one on each side of the house).

In early 2000, the bathrooms and the kitchens in the main house and kitchen building underwent minor renovations. Some countertops, fixtures, and tiles from the 1970s renovation were replaced or repaired. In 2007, painted tin standing-seam roofs on both the main house and the kitchen were replaced with hand-joined standing seam metal roofing, with a manufacturer-installed black finish, to match the replaced roofing material both in design and appearance. In 2008, the kitchen and bathrooms were again renovated, replacing linoleum with tile and granite. There was also a major structural renovation to the 1815 portion of the house necessitated by deterioration of the floor joists. The wood floors were removed so that the joists could be replaced. The floors were then replaced with a combination of the original wood and salvaged vintage flooring.

Though oral tradition holds that the brick dependency directly behind the main house originated as Doctor Read’s office, it was more likely a kitchen/wash house. It has a rectangular footprint, brick exterior end chimneys with corbelled caps, a brick foundation, and gable roof with a relatively steep pitch for interior headroom in the loft, which likely served as servant’s sleeping quarters. The roof is clad with modern standing-seam metal panels and a ridge cap. The building has hand-made bricks laid up in three-course common bond like the house, suggesting both were built at about the same time, circa 1815. Inside, the ground-floor space is bifurcated into small rooms, each with its own front door and very large fireplace suitable for cooking and heating large pots of water. The building was used later as a chicken house. In the 1970s it was renovated into a dwelling and it has remained as such since. A bathroom and kitchen were added inside, but the exterior remained unchanged.

8. Statement of Significance

Summary

Liberty Hall, an imposing Federal-style brick dwelling, was erected circa 1815 for Dr. John Thomas Wyatt Read and his wife, Elizabeth Alexander Read. Their house was a central feature of the historic New London community of Bedford County, Virginia. Read was the son-in-law of one of the region’s leading citizens of the day, Robert Alexander. Alexander had previously built and occupied the first house on the property in 1778, a frame structure he called Solitary Hall, before moving to Campbell County to become its first clerk of court. The property had a role in the Civil War during Union General David Hunter’s Raid on Lynchburg in June, 1864. After occupying Lexington, burning the Virginia Military Institute and looting Washington College, Hunter proceeded through the Peaks of Otter to Liberty (now the City of Bedford), thence a short distance to Liberty Hall at New London where they made an encampment. Hunter torched a number of private homes including former governor John Letcher’s, but spared Liberty Hall.¹ Liberty Hall is among the best examples of the Federal style of architecture in the region, possessing many of the hallmarks of the style and the distinctive characteristics of period construction practices. As such it meets National Register Criterion C in the area of Architecture, with a period of significance of 1815, the date of construction.

Architectural Analysis

Liberty Hall, a two-story, five-bay, brick house with Federal-style details, is strikingly similar to Locust Level, which was listed on the National Register of Historic Places (NRHP) in 1990. Like Liberty Hall, Locust Level also fronts onto U.S. Highway 460, but is 25 miles to the west (thus was bypassed by Hunter’s raid). The Locust Level nomination states that it was built in the 1820s, and is “one of the finest, most-intact Federal-style houses built in Bedford County.” Liberty Hall is easily on par with this description. In fact, these are two of the best preserved among the half-dozen documented five-bay, brick Federal-style houses that survive in Bedford County. There are two very close cousins, however, in nearby Lynchburg: Sandusky (NRHP 1982), built in 1808, nine miles north of Liberty Hall; and the Crowe House, built c.1817 on Jackson Street in Lynchburg’s Federal Hill Historic District (NRHP 1980). All of these notable houses have a two-story linear form that is one-room deep, with a central passage through the middle. Houses of this general form have been sometimes referred to as I-houses. Liberty Hall’s construction date, massing, decorative details, and three-course common bond brick masonry suggest it was constructed by a Lynchburg builder and are consistent with an 1815 construction date.

Archaeological Potential

Although archaeological investigations have not been conducted on the Liberty Hall property, there is great likelihood that outbuilding foundations and other subsurface features dating from the mid-late 18th century would be encountered within the nominated parcel. Much of the ground around the house and outbuilding remains relatively undisturbed, and individual artifacts are frequently discovered in the yard. Such deposits could potentially yield new information about domestic life and construction practices during the period, for example. At this time, however, adequate information to assess the property's significance under Criterion D has not been recovered.

Historical Background

The land on which Liberty Hall is now located was once a part of the extensive holdings of William Callaway, a leading figure in the early days of New London. William transferred a parcel of the property to his son John Callaway in 1767, who then sold it to a Bernard Gaines in 1778. In 1778, 300 acres of that land was acquired by Robert Alexander and his wife Nancy (Ann) Austin of Elk Island.² Robert was the son of Robert Alexander (d.1783), founder of Augusta Academy which later became known as Liberty Hall and today is known as Washington & Lee University.³ The elder Robert Alexander also served as rector and president of the school from 1749 to 1762.⁴

Robert Alexander, the younger, was a prominent citizen in early Bedford County. He was well known for having been integrally involved in founding New London Academy and donated a majority of the land used for the school (from part of the Liberty Hall land).⁵ He served in the Revolutionary War and as deputy clerk of court in Bedford County from 1772 to 1782. In 1782, when Campbell County was formed from Bedford County, Alexander was appointed the first clerk of Campbell County. He served in that position until his death in 1820. He also served as clerk of the Campbell County circuit court from 1809 to 1819.⁶

It is believed that Alexander built the wood frame structure known as Solitary Hall on the property in 1778. When he became clerk of Campbell County he moved to what is today known as Gladys, Virginia.⁷ He deeded the Solitary Hall property to his daughter Elizabeth and her husband Dr. John Thomas Wyatt Read in 1810.⁸ Because of the poor condition of Solitary Hall, Dr. Read built a new brick house in front of the old frame structure sometime around 1815. The property was renamed Liberty Hall during Dr. Read's ownership.⁹

Dr. Read, a noted physician, descended from a distinguished colonial family. He is a direct lineal descendant of George Reade and Elizabeth Martineau of Yorktown (George Washington's great, great grand parents).¹⁰ The Read family was well known for its history of military service during the colonial era. Dr. Read's father and three older brothers (John, Thomas, and Wyatt) all served in the Continental Army. The three brothers died at Valley Forge in 1777. Born after the war, Dr. Read was named for his three deceased brothers.¹¹

Several Read family members were leaders in 19th century Bedford and Lynchburg. They held positions in public office and served in the Civil War. During the conflict, Liberty Hall was owned by Dr. Read's eldest son William A. Read and his wife Mary Jane Hare, of the Lynchburg tobacco family. As Union troops under General David Hunter passed the house on their way to Lynchburg on June 15, 1864, they encamped on the surrounding property. On the morning of June 16, Mr. Read invited General Hunter and his staff in to breakfast and thereby prevented the house from being burned. Among Hunter's staff that day was future presidents Rutherford B. Hayes and William McKinley. Some believed that the time Hunter spent enjoying Read's hospitality was instrumental in his defeat at Lynchburg.¹²

Liberty Hall has remained in the Read family since its construction. The property is currently owned by Orran Lee and Ellen Brown. Orran Lee Brown is the great-great-great-great grandson of Dr. Read. The surrounding farm, owned by Orran Brown and his brother Ryland Brown, is still farmed by the family and has recently been accepted into the Century Farm Program of the Virginia Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services, which honors "those farms that have been in operation for at least 100 consecutive years and the generations of Virginia farm families whose diligent and dedicated efforts have maintained these farms, provided nourishment to their fellow citizens and contributed so greatly to the economy of the Commonwealth."

Endnotes

1. Hunter's Raid began with the Battle of Piedmont on June 5, 1864, then to Staunton, where government buildings and supplies were burned. The raid culminated at the Battle of Lynchburg on June 17-18, 1864. The Union forces were defeated by Confederate General Jubal Early, then in command of Robert E. Lee's 2nd Corps, detached from the lines of Cold Harbor and sent to meet the threat of Hunter. Following the battle, Confederates pursued Union forces back through Bedford, then called Liberty.

10. Geographical Data

Verbal Boundary Description

The boundary of the nominated property coincides with the boundary of the legal parcel designated Tax Map Number 153 A 37 as shown on the enclosed survey map. This survey is recorded in the Clerk's Office of the Circuit Court of Bedford County, Virginia, in Deed Book 367 at Page 60.

Boundary Justification

The nominated property for Liberty Hall includes the 5.22-acre parcel immediately surrounding the home and the dependency. A surrounding area of over 50 acres (which includes a family cemetery) is owned by Orran L. Brown and his brother E. Ryland Brown, but has long been a separate legal tract.
