National Register of Historic Places Continuation Sheet

Woodlawn Plantation (Boundary Increase 2011)

Fairfax County, Virginia

Section 7, Continuation Sheet #1

Narrative Description, Summary Paragraph

The United States Government (Fort Belvoir) is transferring ownership of a 2.82-acre tract southwest of the National Register boundary to the National Trust for Historic Preservation. The 2.82-acre boundary increase, which was originally part of the Woodlawn property, is bounded on the south by U.S. Route 1, on the east by the National Register boundary, on the north by Fort Belvoir, and on the west by the adjacent Woodlawn Quaker Meetinghouse (VDHR # 029-0172) property.

The 2.82-acre tract is currently a lawn with some young trees, shrubbery, and utility poles. A sidewalk parallels the eastern side of Woodlawn Road (State Route 618). The sidewalk does not extend to U.S. Route 1, but does continue north onto Fort Belvoir. A line of trees serves as a visible boundary marker separating the tract from Woodlawn. The tract has been graded and no structures are currently located on the tract. The tract has been disturbed by multiple utility lines.

Detailed Narrative Description

The 2.82-acre parcel was part of the original two-thousand-acre parcel of land that George Washington presented to his ward, Eleanor Parke Custis, granddaughter of Martha Washington, following her marriage in 1799 to his nephew Major Lawrence Lewis. The mansion, constructed between 1800-1805, stands on a hill to the east overlooking Dogue Creek, a site noted by Washington himself for its view of Mount Vernon and the Potomac.¹

In 1846, the original two-thousand-acre parcel was purchased by members of the Society of Friends (Quakers) for use as a timber farm and "free labor colony" to demonstrate to Southern neighbors that a successful agricultural enterprise could be run without the use of enslaved labor. In 1850, one of the Quakers donated land for a meetinghouse on the property, and a structure was built in 1851. The 2.82-acre boundary increase remained connected to Woodlawn until John and Rachel Mason sold it to Joseph M. Wood in 1869. This parcel later became part of the Grand View (VDHR # 029-0062) property. The 2.82-acre boundary increase returned to Woodlawn in 1905, when the owner of Woodlawn, Elizabeth Sharpe, bought Grand View from Ann W. and Jacob M. Troth and others. In 1919, Elizabeth Sharpe sold the 2.82-acre boundary increase to the United States Government, and it became a part of Camp Humphreys (now Fort Belvoir). From 1861-1864 of the Civil War, the Woodlawn Quaker Meetinghouse and adjacent land was heavily used by the Union Army as a camp. The 2.82-acre tract not only reconnects Woodlawn to the Meetinghouse property, but supports interpretation of the Civil War component of the site.

44FX3256 (Noncontributing Site)

The tract has been the focus of an archaeological survey.² Though no structures are currently located on the tract, a previous archaeological study indicates that a structure had probably been situated there. The location (44FX3256) was defined from two positive shovel tests in the area between Woodlawn Road and the existing Woodlawn property line. Artifacts obtained from the site included a small fragment of olive glass, two brick fragments, and four wrought nail fragments, one of which retained its rose head. This small collection of material appears contemporary with the construction of the Woodlawn mansion and may have represented a farm structure or other associated outbuilding. Disturbances caused by multiple utility lines make it difficult to determine any information other than the location of this structure. This archaeological site is noncontributing due to a loss of integrity.

Narrative Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance and applicable criteria)

The 2.82-acre boundary increase was originally part of the land given by George Washington to Eleanor Parke Custis and Major Lawrence Lewis in 1799. The Woodlawn property, including the 2.82-acre boundary increase, was acquired by the Quakers in 1846 for use as a "Free Labor Colony" and played an important symbolic and physical role in linking the mansion, as the center of the property, to the Woodlawn Quaker Meetinghouse. It was the site of Union Army encampment between 1861-1864, and, as such, is the only documented location on Woodlawn property where a Civil War camp existed. The 2.82-acre boundary increase was acquired by the United States Government for Camp Humphreys in 1919. The National Trust for Historic Preservation obtained ownership of the 2.82-acre boundary increase in 2011. Woodlawn was placed on the Virginia Landmarks Register in 1969, the National Register of Historic Places in 1970, and was recognized as a National Historic Landmark in 1998.

The 2.82-acre boundary increase will help reunite the historic core of Woodlawn with the adjacent Woodlawn Quaker Meetinghouse property and help reestablish the physical and historical link of Woodlawn to the surrounding community that, even today, bears its name.

Narrative Statement of Significance, Historical Background (provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance)

George Washington presented approximately 2,000 acres of the Mount Vernon estate to his ward Eleanor Parke Custis, granddaughter of Martha Washington, following her marriage in 1799 to his nephew Major Lawrence Lewis, son of Fielding and Betty (Washington) Lewis of Kenmore. The gift included a mill and a distillery. Washington's friend, Dr. William Thornton, designed the mansion, which was erected between 1800-1805. The Lewis family maintained the property until the 1840s, when it was sold to a group of Quakers from New Jersey and Philadelphia.³ A map of George Washington's Mount Vernon estate, as it appeared in 1801, shows the tract that became part of Woodlawn (see Map 3).⁴

The Society of Friends purchased Woodlawn, in part, to establish an abolitionist community.⁵ Hardwood timber was in great demand for shipbuilding during the antebellum period, and the Society of Friends sent out timber scouts in 1845 to find hardwood forests and land for a community which would demonstrate as false the argument that slave labor was necessary for the operation of a successful plantation in the South. The scouts found that both criteria were met at the then abandoned Woodlawn. Part of their report read:

We were pleased with a part of the Mt. Vernon property belonging to Lorenzo Lewis, a grand nephew of G. Washington, in Fairfax Co., Va., 14 miles from Washington and seven from Alexandria, containing [approximately] 2000 acres of beautiful valley land and a large mansion built of brick and completely furnished, and including 1000 acres of timber, mostly oak, and for which they asked 12 ½ dollars an acre

Lorenzo Lewis, then living near Winchester, entered into an agreement with Joseph and Chalkley Gillingham to sell Woodlawn. Lewis passed away before a deed could be written. On August 6, 1848 a deed was recorded from Laurence B. Taylor, Commissioner, and Esther Maria Lewis to Jacob Troth, Chalkley Gillingham, Lucas Gillingham, and Paul Hillman Troth, conveying 1,959 acres. The Friends surveyed the land and, once sections were cleared by timbering, began dividing it into farms that were sold and worked without slave labor. After congregating in various places, the Quakers constructed their meetinghouse (VDHR# 029-0172) in 1851⁷ on a tract of land adjacent to the 2.82-acre boundary increase parcel.

A plat of Woodlawn attached to an 1848 deed (the plat is dated 1850) shows the extent of the property at that time.⁸ The plat encompasses 1,959 acres, including the 2.82-acre tract that is the subject of the proposed boundary expansion. Soon after this deed was entered, the Friends began selling land, and the Woodlawn property was subdivided into smaller lots, and the tract upon which the Woodlawn mansion was located was reduced considerably.⁹

Woodlawn evolved under the Friends' ownership into a community that included a number of families, including the Masons, Baptists who owned the mansion, as well as other white and free black farmers. While a series of independent freeholds existed in law, in practice the families of Woodlawn regarded themselves as a community, and established institutions (including the Baptist church, Methodist church, and an elementary school) that retained the name and identification with Woodlawn. The sense of collective identity remained until the early 20th century, at which time the United States Government began acquiring property for the development of Camp Humphreys (now Fort Belvoir) during and after the First World War. Land was acquired, families were dispersed, and the century-old social and geographical community disappeared by the end of World War II. The United States Army constructed an access road through the tract that remained in use until shortly after September 11, 2001, when the road was closed for security reasons.

Currently the land is being transferred from the United States Government to the National Trust For Historic Preservation. The National Trust for Historic Preservation is in the process of relocating the entrance to Woodlawn through the 2.82-acre boundary increase. The land transfer and driveway realignment were needed to accommodate the widening of Old Mill Road as part of the Rt. 1/ Telegraph Road connector project. The existing original entrance will not be geometrically suitable for vehicular traffic but will be converted to a pedestrian trail. The 2.82-acre boundary increase will help reunite the historic core of Woodlawn with the adjacent Quaker Meetinghouse property and help reestablish the physical and historical link of Woodlawn to the surrounding community that, even today, bears its name.

Verbal Boundary Description (describe the boundaries of the property)

The 2.82-acre boundary increase is currently under the process of being transferred from the United States Government (Fort Belvoir) to the National Trust for Historic Preservation. A plat depicting the proposed parcel is included with this nomination (see MAP 1). The tract is currently part of Fort Belvoir and, therefore, has no individual tax parcel information. The tract is generally bounded on the south by the U.S. Route 1 (Richmond Highway) right-of-way, the east by the Woodlawn National Register boundary, on the north by Lampert Road, and on the west by the Woodlawn Quaker Meetinghouse (See Maps 1 and 2) .

Boundary Justification (explain why the boundaries were selected)

The 2.82-acre boundary increase tract was originally part of Woodlawn. The property is located adjacent to the current National Trust for Historic Preservation-owned Woodlawn boundary. The ownership of the 2.82-acre boundary increase is currently being transferred from the United States Government (Fort Belvoir) to the National Trust for Historic Preservation. The proposed increase is a rejoining under common ownership of part of the original Woodlawn tract (See Maps 1, 2 and 3).
