Aquia Church is a two-story brick structure with a hipped roof and an unusual and unique tower and cupola worked into the upper level of the entrance arm of the building. The exterior of the church is noteworthy for its fine stonework decoration which appears in the keystones of all the windows, the quoins of all eight corners of the building, and in the three pedimented and rusticated doorways. The walls are laid in Flemish bond with random glazed headers; rubbed brick appears in all the window jambs and arches. The modillion cornice on both the main part of the building and the tower is probably original. The windows of the first level have flat arches while those of the second level are topped by semi-circular arches. The sash of the first level windows is original although the muntins have been replaced; the sash of the upper level windows is a twentieth century restoration. Other twentieth century work includes the roof shingles and doors. The water-table has also been renewed.

The handsome interior of Aquia Church retains its original triple-tier pulpit, reredos, west gallery, and pews.) The magnificent pulpit includes the reading desk, and the clerk's desk, as well as the sounding board. The reredos is composed of four tablets separated by Ionic pilasters and topped by a pediment. Although the pews are original, all save the one immediately below the pulpit have been cut down. The wooden ceiling dates from just after the Civil War. The flagstones in the aisles are twentieth century, the originals having been removed to make the front walk and fill the old road to the church. The marble floor in the chancel dates from 1933. Although most of the later alterations detract from the building, none of them are irremediable.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE (Include Personages, Dates, Events, Etc.)

One of two colonial churches in Virginia with a true Greek cross plan, Aquia Church was erected in 1751, with Mourning Richards as "undertaker" (contractor). William Copein, who also worked on Pohick Church in nearby Fairfax County, was employed as the church's mason. The church was(severely damaged by fire in 1754 and rebuilt in 1757. It is believed that only the present walls date from 1751, and that the remainder of the fabric including the interior dates from the rebuilding of 1757.) Services had been held on or near the site of the existing building as early as 1654. The present church became the parish church for Overwharton Parish in 1757.

As it stands today, Aquia Church is one of the most elaborate, as well as one of the best preserved of Virginia's colonial churches. It ranks as one of the more important examples of colonial ecclesiastical architecture in the nation. Its rich interior appointments are among the finest in the state; the magnificent triple-tiered pulpit is unique in Virginia.

Aquia Church is fortunate to possess its 1739-40 Thomas Farren communion silver. The silver was buried in the wars of 1776, 1812, and 1861-65.

Although located near a major highway in a part of the state that ig rapidly becoming urbanized, Aquia Church, with its churchyard and surrounding woods, still possesses a placid rural setting.
