DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This late-Greek Revival structure is a brick temple-form building with a portico containing two unfluted Doric columns in antis. The sides of the building are decorated with Doric pilasters framing recessed panels which originally contained tall semi-circular arched windows. These windows have been filled in and now contain two levels of rectangular windows. Although the form of the building is basically Greek Doric, its entablature, with modillions and dentils, is Roman Corinthian. The frieze of the entablature is decorated with a series of rosettes. Originally the church had a cupola but this has been removed. Unfortunately, little of the original fabric remains visible on the interior as the auditorium was divided into two floors to contain offices and classrooms.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE (Include Personages, Dates, Events, Etc.)

Built in 1876, the African Baptist Church housed one of the oldest Negro congregations in Virginia. The design of the late-Greek Revival church echoed that of the First Baptist Church at 12th Street and Broad. The African Baptist Church was sold to the Medical College of Virginia in 1955 and now houses offices and classrooms for the college.
