Summary Paragraph

The Blair Apartments, located at 231 Chestnut Street in Salem, Virginia, was built circa 1949 as a Colonial Revival-style garden apartment. The U-shaped building consists of seven attached blocks, each with its own entrance, that surround an open area of grass and connecting walkways. Hip roofs with dormers, decorative brick jack arches and corner quoins as well as louvered shutters accentuate the central and two end blocks while the four connecting interior, corner blocks feature flat roofs and simpler facades. Unifying elements include a simple cornice, double-hung metal sash windows with six-over-six lights, and pedimented door surrounds. Constructed of concrete block with a brick veneer on a solid concrete foundation, the building sections are either two or two-and-a-half stories in height and feature an exposed basement and garage level at the rear. Each block of the building contains two apartments per floor with a central hall with a front and rear stair. The one- and two-bedroom apartment units are simple in design and finishes, each including a living room, dining area, kitchen, bedroom(s) and one bathroom with plaster walls and ceilings and floors covered in either carpet or vinyl tile.

Narrative Description

The Blair Apartments are located on a nearly two-acre parcel at 231 Chestnut Street in the City of Salem. The property is surrounded by single-family residences with Salem's commercial district of Main Street located two blocks to the north. The site is relatively flat but with a steeply-sloping grade at the rear where a creek runs along the western edge of the property. An alley runs along the south side to parking at the rear where the basement and garage levels are exposed due to the grade change. A public sidewalk extends across the front of the lot with an intersecting central concrete walkway connecting to additional walks leading to the entrance stoops at each block of the building. The U-shaped building surrounds an open area of grass with minimal shrubbery along the building foundation.

The ca. 1949 Blair Apartments were designed and constructed as Colonial Revival-style garden apartments. The U-shaped building comprises seven attached masonry blocks arranged around a central courtyard. Prominent 2½-story middle and end blocks—characterized by flat-topped hipped roofs with gable dormers—protrude into the courtyard. Composition shingles sheath the roofs. The middle and end blocks also feature decorative brickwork, such as quoins and jack arches above the windows, as well as inoperable louvered wood shutters on elevations facing Chestnut Street. The four two-story blocks, which join at right angles to define the corners of the complex, are simple in their detailing and are sheltered by flat roofs. All seven blocks are constructed of concrete block faced with brick veneer. The buildings in the complex stand over a poured concrete foundation with an exposed basement at the rear, which is lined with garage bays. A cornice unifies the entire front of the complex. A single entry door is centered on the front of each block. The door surround is composed of a pediment and pilasters. A concrete stoop approaches each entrance. The original double-hung sash metal windows with 6/6 lights remain intact throughout the building. Although aluminum siding has been added around the cornice and door surrounds, the original features beneath are believed to still be intact.

The complex comprises 22 one-bedroom units and 18 two-bedroom units, each with a common utilitarian design. Central front and rear stairwells divide each block into halves. The main stairwell leads to apartment entries which open directly to living rooms, while the rear service stair leads from the dining room and kitchen to laundry and trash areas. In each apartment, from the living room, a short hallway leads to the bedroom(s), bathroom, and closets. Interior finishes consist of bonded masonry block furred out with painted drywall and drywall ceilings. Flooring materials include vinyl tile or carpet over concrete. Common throughout the complex are two-panel wood interior doors and wood baseboard trim. The bathrooms contain porcelain bathtubs with ceramic tile surrounds, a toilet, and a sink.

Overall the property has a high level of integrity of location, setting, design, workmanship, materials, feeling and association. The integrity of materials is slightly diminished by the installation of aluminum wrapping around the exterior cornice and door surrounds, but this is considered to be a relatively minor and reversible alteration.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance, applicable criteria, justification for the period of significance, and any applicable criteria considerations.)

The Colonial Revival-style Blair Apartments is an excellent example of Federal Housing Authority (FHA)-sponsored garden apartments constructed in Salem, Virginia, in response to the growing population after World War II and the increased local workforce associated with new and expanding industries in the area. The resource is significant under Criterion A in the area of Social History as it was built under the auspices of the FHA's standards for multiple family housing that had been promulgated since the latter years of the Great Depression. The FHA promoted the use of the garden apartment model from the 1930s through the 1950s to provide affordable rental housing for working-class Americans and returning World War II veterans. In Salem, Blair Apartments is one of just two complexes constructed using FHA funding in the post-World War II period between 1945 and 1950 and it exists as the best example of this type of complex in the city. The property also is significant under Criterion C in the area of Architecture as an example of a postwar garden apartment complex that, due to its high degree of integrity, retains the character-defining features promoted in FHA guidelines, such as landscaped courtyards and green spaces, natural light and air circulation, centralized laundry, and off-street parking. The building also has minimal Colonial Revival attributes of the type commonly used on buildings throughout Virginia from the 1940s through the late twentieth century. Since the 1880s, the Colonial Revival style has been immensely popular in Virginia but, in keeping with nationwide architectural trends, ornamental embellishments reflective of the style became steadily more streamlined and subtle by the 1930s, a trend that continued for the remainder of the twentieth century, especially for modestly budgeted housing projects intended for working class residents. The Blair Apartments is significant at the local level with a period of significance of 1949 to encompass its construction.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance)

History

The Blair Apartments was constructed to meet the demand for affordable rental housing in Salem after World War II. Like many urbanized areas across the country, the then Town of Salem experienced a population surge in the 1940s and the 1950s. A Chamber of Commerce survey conducted in 1940 indicated that Salem was economically prosperous and stable, with a diversity of business and industry.¹ The establishment of the Roanoke Veterans Administration Hospital (NRHP 2012) in 1934 provided many jobs to local residents – both during its construction and due to its employment of 300 permanent staff after opening in 1935.² The Neuhoff Meat Packing Plant (now Valleydale) also opened nearby in 1936 with 75 employees. By 1941, Neuhoff had expanded to employ over 100 workers. When the United States entered World War II in 1941, Salem industries supported the war effort through local manufacturers, such as the Comas Cigarette Machine Company, which made specialized parts and steel casings for aircraft carriers.³

Economic prosperity in Salem continued after World War II, with business expansions and the start of new enterprises. The Roanoke Veterans Administration Hospital increased its capacity with the construction of new facilities to accommodate returning war veterans. By 1952, the complex had a bed capacity of 2,000 and it employed nearly 600 medical and support staff.⁴ Yale and Towne, a new lock manufacturing plant, opened in 1948, employing 500-800 people.⁵ The Graham-White Manufacturing Plant relocated to the Salem area in 1950 and General Electric built a large plant in 1955. Business growth was supported by a population increase of 1,100 people in the town of Salem between 1940 and 1950. Annexations of Roanoke County territory in 1953 and 1960 caused the population to soar from 6,823 to 16,058 between 1950 and 1960.⁶

Demand for affordable rental housing increased dramatically nationwide after World War II, on account of returning veterans, industrial expansion, and a nationwide population boom. Across the nation, developers constructed apartments using mortgages backed by the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) to meet the needs of veterans and the working class. Blair Apartments Corporation acquired the land on Chestnut Street for the development of apartments in 1949. The developers were well-connected Salem residents, Howard S. Rice and Walter C. Chapman. Chapman's wife, Evelyn Wiley Chapman, was related to the family that developed Wiley court in Salem in the mid-1930s. The name for the Blair Apartments also came from Mrs. Chapman's family as she was the granddaughter of Judge Henry Edmundson Blair, a prominent figure in Salem's early history. The apartments were financed with a FHA-backed mortgage for the amount of $248,800. The 1951 Hill City Directory shows the early residents as typical of the local working class, including a nurse and a building contractor.

FHA-BACKED MORTGAGES

The federal government first entered the mortgage lending business during the Great Depression, after widespread bank failures caused a dramatic decrease in home loans and homeownership. President Roosevelt signed the National Housing Act into law in 1934, creating the Federal Housing Administration and establishing the federal government as the guarantor of home mortgages provided by banking institutions. New lending practices extended the length of home mortgage loans and reduced the down payment size, allowing millions of Americans to purchase their first homes. The National Housing Act also contained a provision for mutual mortgage insurance on low-cost rental housing to attract private investment from developers. In 1935, Colonial Village in Arlington, Virginia, became the first large-scale rental housing project to be insured by the FHA. The success of the project encouraged the development of additional rental housing. Amendments to the National Housing Act were passed in 1938 and 1939, resulting in the increased use of FHA-backed financing for projects across the country.⁷

At the start of World War II, the FHA shifted its focus to developing lower rent housing for wartime workers. The need for defense housing surged after the United States entered the war in December 1941. The FHA financed affordable rental housing near centers of defense employment, such as the Washington, DC metropolitan area.⁸ In 1942, Congress enacted Section 608 of the National Housing Act to increase the number of multiple-family working class housing units, after recognizing the massive housing shortage. Financing terms were relaxed to stimulate developers building the much-needed housing.⁹ The demand for affordable housing remained strong after World War II, with thousands of veterans returning home. The Veterans Emergency Housing Act led to a sharp increase in postwar demand for new rental housing.¹⁰

GARDEN APARTMENTS

Garden apartments emerged as the leading model for affordable rental housing promoted by the FHA from the 1930s to the 1950s.¹¹ The housing type was based on the principles of the Garden City movement, which gained popularity in the United States in the 1920s. The movement emphasized a migration away from overcrowded city centers to rural districts where residents could have plentiful access to fresh air and green open spaces. The Garden City concept provided developers with a framework to build affordable, attractive apartments that were much needed in the 1930s and 1940s.¹² The garden apartment design boasted landscaped courtyards and green spaces, natural light and air circulation, centralized laundry, and the provision of off-street parking. Each complex comprised multiple buildings that were at least two and no more than three stories high with a single main public entrance with no lobby or elevator. The resulting model provided affordable and attractive housing that also allowed the developer to profit.¹³

Gustave Ring adopted the garden apartment design for Colonial Village in Arlington County, Virginia. The apartment complex was the first to be issued an FHA-insured mortgage under Section 207 of the National Housing Act.¹⁴ Ring and his architects envisioned a planned community with apartment buildings situated in a park-like setting with large landscaped courtyards. The Colonial Revival style was employed for the apartment buildings. The first phase of the project was completed in 1935. Its success prompted the construction of numerous other garden apartment complexes based on its design. Colonial Village thus became the model for FHA-assisted apartment complexes across the nation.¹⁵

The garden apartment model fit well with FHA housing standards, which emphasized low-rise apartment designs that did not exceed three stories in height. Narrow courts were to be avoided to assure minimum reasonable land coverage. The standards also recommended that dwelling units be laid out economically with maximum cross ventilation. Garden apartments satisfied the FHA standards, being two to three stories and oriented around a central courtyard to maximize ventilation. Efficient layouts were provided through the use of central entrances with shared access to public stairs. Because the garden-apartment design fit its standards so well, the FHA promoted the construction of this apartment type in urban settings across the nation through its financing programs.

FHA-FINANCED GARDEN APARTMENTS IN SALEM, VIRGINIA

The Blair Apartments was constructed in 1949 using FHA financing to meet the affordable housing needs of returning veterans and working class residents in the Salem area. Only two apartment complexes were built in Salem with FHA-backed mortgages: Blair Apartments and Elizabeth Heights Apartments, located on Elizabeth Avenue. Blair Apartments are more sophisticated in their design with pronounced Colonial Revival features and configuration around a landscaped central courtyard. While the Elizabeth Heights Apartments allude to the Colonial Revival style, the apartments are simpler in design with no distinctive architectural features. In addition, the buildings are oriented to the street rather than around a central courtyard. The scale of the apartments also differs with the 40-unit Blair Apartments being almost twice the size of the 24-unit Elizabeth Heights Apartments. Known today as Chestnut Manor, the apartment complex at 231 Chestnut Street continues to provide affordable housing to working-class residents and their families in a suburban, park-like setting within the City of Salem.

NATIONAL REGISTER ELIGIBILITY

Blair Apartments is locally significant under Criterion A in the area of Social History and under Criterion C in the area of Architecture. From the 1930s onward, the FHA exercised tremendous influence on housing projects across the United States.¹⁶ The minimum design standards promulgated by the agency sprang from the City Beautiful movement as well as Progressive Era reforms that emphasized provision of access to green spaces, natural light, and adequate ventilation. Constructed with FHA financing specifically to function as a multiple dwelling, the Blair Apartments is composed of seven individual buildings grouped around a central landscaped courtyard. The complex is designed and sited to relate to the surrounding landscape. Each building is at least two and no more than three stories high and has a single main public entrance. The buildings do not contain an elevator. Each building is designed to contain at least four self-sufficient dwelling units. Designed in the Colonial Revival-style, the Blair Apartments follow the design trends described in the New Dominion Virginia Architectural Style Guide:

Colonial Revival houses constructed after World War II began to feature more stripped-down and economical interpretations of the style. Window and doors surrounds were simplified, shutters became fixed instead of operable, stylistic references all but disappeared from secondary elevations, and building forms and massing became more symmetrical. To a large extent, these simplifications were dictated by mass production, lighter materials, and accelerated construction schedules.¹⁷

The complex also is consistent with other FHA-financed garden apartments in Virginia. As such, the Blair Apartment complex is the best example of FHA-financed garden apartments in the City of Salem as it represents the area's response to the post-World War II demand for affordable housing and the impact of national trends in the financing and design of housing during this era.

Verbal Boundary Description (Describe the boundaries of the property.)

The historic boundary is drawn to be coterminous with the lot lines of Tax Parcel 144-1-5, as recorded by the City of Salem. The true and correct boundaries are shown on the attached Sketch Map.

Boundary Justification (Explain why the boundaries were selected.)

The boundary includes the 1.88-acre property that has been associated with Blair Apartments since its construction in 1949 and thus includes its historic setting as well as all known historic resources.
